THE YOUNG PEOPLE

by GERTRUDE SCHWEITZER

LONDON: PETER DAVIES

THE YOUNG PEOPLE

The 5:23 from New York was late. Zelda lit another cigarette and stretched her neck out the Buick window so she could see the tracks. The train would come as quickly if she sat comfortably back against the seat, and Tony would find the car without her assistance, since it was parked in the same spot every evening. But she could never relax when she was waiting.

She could never relax, period, she thought, and recognized with amusement a certain pride in the idea. No successful suburban matron knew how to relax—or wanted to know, which amounted to the same thing.

Zelda glanced briefly at her watch and then at the empty tracks again. What if something had happened? What if Tony never arrived?

She was deliberately frightening herself, the way she used to do when she was a child, left to sleep alone at night, trying to imagine that her clothes hanging on the chair formed the shape of a man who waited in the dark to kidnap her.

Still, what if she had to go on without Tony? Women managed such things, of course, some of them on purpose. Half the women she knew had been divorced. She had even thought seriously once of divorcing Tony. But now she never would. It was impossible to imagine a life without Tony or, worse still, with somebody else. It had taken her years to acquire a taste for the meat, for example, and now she didn't like it any other way, yet another man might want his well done. Even the thought of a whole new series of adjustments made her tired.

She had just lit a third eigarette when the train came roaring around the bend as importantly as if it were headed across the continent instead of for northern Westchester. Before it heaved to a stop, men leaped from its steps. Were they trying to prove their agility, Zelda thought, or only rushing to get seats on the bus?

After these, Tony was, as usual, one of the first to get off. He walked briskly, refreshed from his nightly nap in the train, waving at Zelda and grinning. He had had a good day, then When he hadn't, the lines in his face made him look haggard instead of interesting, and it was a little easier to believe that he had a twenty-year-old son and a daughter seventeen. She thought of her father, paunchy, gray and stooped behind his hardware counter at Tony's age—an oldish man, if not an old one.

"Hello, Babe," he said. "Been waiting long? The train was late."

He bent down and kissed her through the window before she moved to let him into the driver's seat.

"I didn't mind," she lied. "I was thinking."

∫"What about?"

"Oh, all kinds of things. That I'm glad I married you, for one."
"Ah. A sensible woman, I always did say.". He maneuvered out of the snarl of station traffic and headed the car toward home.
"Did you have the oil changed today?"

She laughed, and lit a cigarette for him and one for herself. "You're so romantic, darling," she said contentedly. "Yes, I had the oil changed."

"Looks as if it's going to be a good weekend for a change. Maybe I can get in a round of golf in the morning."

"Tomogrow? Jim's first day home?"

"You don't imagine Jim's going to be hanging around waiting for me to entertain him, do you? As soon as he thinks it's polite, he'll be off to see that girl of his."

"Yes, I know. He only boards with us, really, doesn't he? I always look forward to the summer and think we're going to see such a lot of him. I suppose it wouldn't be natural if we did."

"I'll see plenty of him, once he starts working at the office!"

Zelda mashed out her cigarette. "I wish he'd work somewhere else, even if it's just for the summer."

"Oh? Is this something new?"

"No. I've been thinking about it ever since he first said he wanted a job with you. I don't believe it's a good thing." She could feel herself growing tense in preparation for Tony's opposition. "He doesn't care about advertising, not one little bit."

"You're wrong," Tony said, his voice edged with anger. "He and I had a long talk when I was up for the reunion. He'll get a little training this summer, and take the right course in college next year, and then go in with me permanently. That's what he's looking forward to."

After the array is through with him, she thought. Three years from now—at least. He can change his mind a dozen times before then. Still, she felt she had to pursue the subject, now that she had finally come out with it.

"He wants it because it's safe," she said. "He feels it will give him security, and he'll be able to marry Libby and never worry about the future."

"Well, what's wrong with that?"

She glanced at him impatiently. His heavy, well-shaped brows were drawn together, his large mouth compressed against this thing she was telling him.

"Nothing, if he cared about the work too, or was fitted for it," she persisted. "You could have gone into your father's jewelry business, couldn't you? And been rich twenty years ago, before taxes took everything. But you thought it was more important to do something you really wanted to do."

"Sure—and maybe I was a fool, too. Instead of beating my brains out.... Anyhow, I'm not forcing Jim into this you know, the way my father tried to force me. It's his own choice." He looked at her briefly, coldly. "What do you want me to do—tell him he can't work for me, because I don't think he'd like it? That he has to find something he's crazy about or be out of a job? Leave the boy alone, Zelda. He's old enough to know what he wants."

Zelda said nothing more. It was useless. Tony, like his father before him, wanted his son in business with him, wanted him to like the work and be good at it. He would never insist on it—not in this day when every informed parent was an amateur psychiatrist—but he was delighted that Jim had delided on it for himself. He would be all the more disappointed when it didn't work out.

Parents were always disappointed, she thought, one way or another. Now that people had learned it was best for children to have more freedom to manage their own lives, the children didn't want it any more. Parents like Tony and herself, who had grown up in the twenties, were equipped to understand the rebellions of their children. Only their children didn't rebel. Somehow, it seemed, the generations always managed to miss each other.

"It will be all right," Tony said. "You, worry too much."

She smiled, and leaned comfortably against his shoulder. "I don't. Sometimes I don't worry for whole minutes at a time."

They turned in between the stone pillars that marked the entrance to Underwood Park. It was a little older, a little less spacious than the Haddon Hills section, but the residents always said that it was friendlier. However, most of those who graduated out of the $25-$35,000 a-year class moved to Haddon Hills.

Zelda had no wish to move, even in the unlikely event that they ever would be able to afford it. They had lived in their house ten years, and it had been eleven years old when they bought it, but it had been built for permanence and comfort. The walls were thick, the roof was good, the plumbing was copper, and there were no odd little rooms nor meandering hallways. One maid with another once a week for the heavy cleaning, had always managed to take care of it. A solid red brick house, with no picture windows or concealed radiators, but shaded by old trees and softened by plantings that seemed to have been there always.

"When we're too feeble to climb the stairs," Zelda had said to Tony once, "we'll have to move to one of those ranch house affairs."

"I should say not," he had answered. "I had enough of that all-on-one-floor business in New York apartments for thirty years. I still get a kick out of going upstairs to bed. When we're feeble, we'll build in an elevator."

She went inside, now, while Tony put the car away, and called in to the kitchen to ask Rena, the maid, whether there were any messages. Rena came out into the hall. She was a light-skinned colored woman of about thirty-five who had been with them not quite eleven months, longer than any maid in recent years. Zelda always said her only virtue was that she stayed. She was not very bright or very clean or a very good cook. But they were all used to her and liked her. More important, she seemed to like them.

"Miss Taylor called," she said.

"Who?" Rena never got a name straight.

"Your sister, Miss Taylor."

"Oh, Mrs. Taynor. What did she say?"

"She's coming Sunday, but you don't have to meet her. She ain't taking the train. Somebody's driving her, and she don't know what time she'll get here, but you should expect her."

Somebody was driving her. Oh, Lord, Zelda thought. Not another man, not already, with her second marriage barely cold in its grave.

"All right," Zelda said. "Anything else?" •

"No, Ma'am."

6'Is Ann home yet?" She had tried, with three successive maids, to make it "Miss Ann," and finally given it up. Ann didn't care, anyhow. She thought "Miss Ann" sounded like somebody out of "Gone with the Wind."

"She's sleeping," Rena said. "She only wants to be woken up for dinner or if Bill calls."

What is she sleeping for? Zelda wondered, as she went upstairs. I never slept in the middle of the day when I was seventeen, and if I had I'd have left a different message. Don't wake me unless a man calls—any man. Imagine, at seventeen, being limited to Bill, to that half-baked little boy, only seventeen himself. . . .

As she sat down at the dressing-table and creamed her face, she could hear the rattle of ice from the kitchen. Tony had a theory that cocktails ought to stand in the reffigerator for a while to mellow—a theory that, as far as Zelda knew, had been born with him and would die with him. Yet his drinks always turned out very well.

She wiped off her make-up and looked at herself. It was always a shock. Her face felt the same as twenty years ago. I don't really mind the lines so much, she thought. You can always believe they give you character. But the little sagging spots, the little flabbiness. . . .

Still, she was an attractive woman, and she could have passed for less than forty. Her figure had scarcely changed, yet she did not have to watch her weight. She was top thin, if anything—always had been. I burn myself up, she thought, but it's a fashionable disability.

The phone rang, and instantly Ann's door opened. There was no further sound until Rena yelled up, "Ann! It's him!" Then the door creaked open wider, and Ann's loafers slapped down the stairs. My dainty little daughter, Zelda thought.

"She's lying flat on her back on the floor," Tony said, when he came up, "with the phone on her chest. Maybe she can't think of sweet nothings sitting up in a chair."

"Sweet nothings? Don't be silly. She's telling him what Miss Ferdinand said to her in history, and how she did on the French exam, and how much math homework she has."

Tony took off his shirt and scratched his stomach absently. Without his clothes, he looked a little thick around the middle, and the hair on his chest was graying. She felt pity because he was aging too, but only for a moment. You did not have to feel sorry these days for men who were getting older. Look at Pınza. "You sound mad," Tony said. "What do you care what they talk about?"

"Who?"

He grinned. "That's my Babe. Can't keep head ind on any one thing for more than five minutes. Ann and bill," he said. "You were objecting because she was probably telling him how much math homework she has."

Zelda dottechher cheeks with cream rouge. "It's such a waste, that's all. Seventeen," she said. "And what is she doing with it? Flopping around in sloppy old loafers and those awful blue jeans that make her stick out in back, talking on the phone every night to the same silly little boy about school."

"He's almost six feet tall," Tony said.

Zelda ignored this. "When I was seventeen," she said, "I had half a dozen beaux, and I wouldn't have looked at one under twenty. And I didn't talk to them about history."

"I didn't talk about history either," Tony said, retreating into the bathroom. "As I remember it, I never wasted much time talking at all—hot with a girl . . ."

That was how you were likely to think of that period—as a time when all you did was neck (funny how that term had persisted; what was its origin? she wondered—it always made her think of two giraffes with their necks intertwined) and drink terrible liquor out of flasks or coffee cups.

But there was plenty of talk then, too—mostly about sex. You felt very daring when you discussed sex with men. You had always been taught not to discuss it with anybody, not even girls, nobody except your mother, who was certainly the last person to whom you'd mention it. But you talked about other things too—love, which you pretended you didn't believe in, and even poetry. It was all right to like poetry, as long as it was on the cynical side (cynical, she thought; you hardly ever hear that word any more) like Ernest Dowson or John Weaver.

And sometimes, in groups, you discussed politics. You decided that almost everything about the government was wrong and ought to be changed, but you never did anything about it. Except for one or two who joined the Socialist party and voted for Norman Thomas when they became old enough. But those were never really in Zelda's crowd.

Sex had been the big thing, though. They had acted as if they'd discovered it. Yet girls had done everything to make themselves as unwomanly and unseductive as possible, by any standards that had ever existed before or since at and the men found them appealing just the same. We had It, Zelda thought, but I don't know why.

She was the type for her time, small, skinny, flat-bosomed, and when she cut her dark hair in a boyish bob, she looked piquant, thin-faced and big-eyed. She was popular, without yielding more than occasional kisses. Her technique was simple and self-taught. She pretended to be so shaken by the nearness of whatever man was importuning her that she could not trust herself.

"Please," she would say, in a breathless whisper. "Please take me home now, while I can still keep my head . . ."

She felt nothing beyond a small interest when she was kissed, but it would have been as shameful to admit that she was not physically stirred as to admit that she was stirred emotionally.

Everything was simple and pleasant until she met Morgan Riley. Zelda lived with her parents and two younger brothers in a pleasantly commonplace house on a once-fashionable street in Framington, a city of 50,000 in northern New York. Her father owned a large hardware store and made about $8,000 a year, very little of which he gave to the government. A family of six could live comfortably on that in Framington in the middle twenties. They had no servants and no car, but neither did anyone else on their street. They were middle middle-class, and kept quite strictly and contentedly within their own caste. Except Maicia, the oldest, two years older than Zelda, who had made the whole family miserable until her parents consented to let her go to New York City to study Art.

Zelda met Morgan Riley when she was eighteen. She was at

The Shack, a roadhouse twenty miles outside of town, with Hal Wilson and two other couples, and he was alone. She was dancing with Hal when she noticed him. Hal danced with his cheek against hers, and his skin felt uncomfortably hot. He kept telling her how sweet she was and asking her when she was coming outside in the car with him, and she decided she didn't like him very much and might not go out with him again. She had enough admirers without him. Only of course you never had enough.

"There's a man all by himself," she said, to distract ... "Why would anybody come to The Shack all by himself?"

"That's Morgan Riley," Hal said. "He's been living trance or somewheres. My father works for his father."

He sounded romantic, a man who had lived in France He looked romantic too, so dark and brooding. "I'd like to meet him," Zelda said.

Hal was sulky about it. He didn't want to introduce her to anybody; he wanted to go outside in the car with her. Besides, he didn't really know Morgan Riley. He had only met him once, when he had gone to the office to see his father.

"Please," Zelda said, and pouted. "Pretty please with sugar on it."

Morgan Riley did not seem delighted to meet her. He looked at Hal without recognition, nodded to Zelda and asked, as though he hoped they wouldn't, whether they would sit down.

"Mr. Riley, I've been watching you, and I'm just overcome with curiosity," Zelda said. "Why on earth are you here all alone on a Saturday night, a man as—well—?" She stopped and blinked her eyelashes at him. "I hope you don't think I've got an awful nerve."

He seemed to be making an effort to focus on her. "Not at all," he murmured.

"Then will you tell me?" She leaned across the table toward him, hoping he could smell her perfume, "Vierge Folic."

When he tried to lift his glass of water, it sloshed all over the table. Everyone she knew got hilarious with liquor, or maudlin, or passed out. She had never seen anybody just sit quietly drunk and do nothing.

"Not at all mysterious," he said, with slow, and exquisite enunciation. "I like to be alone."

Hal took her arm. "Come on," he saids "Can't you take a hint?"

"You go along," Zelda said, smiling at him brightly. "I'll meet you back at the table later."

As soon as he was gone and she was alone with Morgan Riley she was frightened. He was much older than the men she knew, twenty-five, perhaps, and unlike anyone she was used to.

He shook his head at her solemnly. "Not nice. Not at all nice." "I don't care," she said. "He's too fat, and he has bad breath."

Morgan Riley smiled, and crinkles of flesh hid his glazed eyes. He looked happy and familiar and not drunk any more.

"No worse than mine, I'll bet," he said. "Polished off a pint tlask of rye since dinner." He made a stiff little bow. "Care to dance?"

Later he took her home in his car. Or rather she took him home. He insisted that he was in no condition to drive, which was something new for her. Every other man she knew was sure he could drive, even when he was ready to fall on his face. Morgan also insisted upon sitting alone in the rumble seat.

"Don't trust myself," he said. "Liquor makes me amorous. You're too young and pure."

"How do you know?" she asked him indignantly. "You don't know anything about me."

They were standing beside his car, a new Marmon roadster that was plainly yellow even in the dan light of the empty parking lot. He stood so stiffly that Zelda felt he would topple over if she touched him. She was still a little frightened, but she could hear herself telling the girls about it on the telephone tomorrow... "I was at The Shack with that dumb Hal Wilson, and this perfectly marvelous-looking man, like Ronald Colman only more sombre, if you know what I mean, was sitting all alone at a table-imagine, all alone on a Saturday night at The Shack-and he kept staring at me . . ."

"Mean you aren't young and pure?" Riley said. "That's different."

He scarcely seemed to move, but at once his mouth was so hard on her's that her teeth bit into the inside of her lips. She smelled whisky and bay rum and tobacco. Long afterwards, when she had almost forgotten Morgan Riley, that combination of aromas always excited her.

If it had occurred to her to fight him, she couldn't; her legs were too rubbery and her arms too heavy. But it didn't occur to her. Nothing at all occurred to her.

Riley moved away and frowned down at her. "See?" he said. She held on to the door of the car. "See what?"

"Baby," he said. "Nothing but a baby. Get in."

He opened the door for her, bowing gravely, and then climbed carefully and with dignity into the rumble seat. Instantly he was asleep. She drove him to his house and, since she could think of nothing else to do with him, left him in the rumble seat and took a taxi home.

She did not sleep all the rest of the night. "Morgan," she said aloud. "Morgan, I love you." She imagined him here in the room, kissing her, saying wonderful things to her. She was glad that Marcia had gone to New York, that the bed beside her was empty. It would have been silly to imagine Morgan here, with Marcia in the room.

By the next day, their love affair had made so much progress in her mind that she could not believe it when she did not hear from him. She waited another day, and the following evening she called him.

"Hello," she said. "This is Zelda."

"Who?"

It was a bad connection, she thought. "Zelda," she said. "Zelda Lisbon."

There was a small pause. "Zelda! How wonderful to hear from you. It's been years, hasn't it?"

"Oh, years," she said. "Ever since Saturday night." She was so angry she was afraid she was going to cry. "I hope you slept well in the rumble seat."

She hung up, and then stared at the phone appalled, because maybe now it was all over, the shortest love affair on record, and she had done it herself, in a foolish burst of temper. He couldn't help it, could he, if he had had too much to drink that night and was a little hazy about what had happened?

She had reached for the telephone, when it rang.

"You didn't really think I'd forgotten, did you," he said. "Can't you take a joke, Stella?"

"Zelda."

He laughed. "All right, you win. But I remember you were pretty and you drove me home and I kissed you."

A week ago she would have known that a man could say all this without remembering anything. She knew it now. But she told herself that he had not forgotten their kiss, that he could not forget it, any more than she could.

"When am I going to see you?" he asked.

Long after the whole thing was over, she would think about it and wonder what had happened to her. She met Morgan Riley once or twice when she went home to visit, and she could see nothing in him at all. It frightened her to think that she would have married him if he'd have had her.

She would have married him. Or anything else he wanted, if she could have convinced herself that he loved her. She tried, even though he told her almost every time they were together that he did not, but she never quite managed it.

Her best friend, Kathy, did not see what difference it made. Kathy was blonde and voluptuous, no matter how tightly she hooked her brassiere.

"Whatever it is you feel for each other, it's something natural and powerful, and you're foolish to deny it," she said. "If you do, you'll alw iys be frustrated."

Zelda accepted this. There had never been a generation that so earnestly intellectualized love-making. But secretly, so secretly that she scarcely knew it herself, she was a romantic, and she did not believe that when Browning wrote "Three Days," he was only looking forward to getting Elizabeth into the back seat of his brougham, or that there was nothing more between Heloise and Abelard than a biological accident. She talked and acted the way everybody else did, but she was waiting for something more glorious—a grand passion for which she would give up everything.

She knew she had not found it with Morgan Riley, but she wanted to believe she had. She told herself that his indifference was only his way of fighting the threatened loss of his freedom.

Actually, his freedom could not have been less in danger. He broke dates with her whenever it suited him, and seldom telephoned when he said he would. She always called him, if she had not heard from him for a day or two.

"You run after him too much," Kathy told her. "You throw yourself at him. No man likes that."

"You don't understand," Zelda said "I can't play games with Morgan, or use a lot of sally ferminine wiles on him. This is too big for that. There can't be anything but honesty between us."

The fact was she could not wait to see if he would call her; she could not wait to be with him. Away from him, it bothered her that they went through only the briefest formalities of speech before they began making love, and that they really knew nothing about each other at all. But when they were together, she was more impatient than he was, partly because the only time he ever said anything sweet to her was when she was in his arms.

"What are you holding out for, anyhow?" he asked her once, when she had pushed him away in the car. "I'm not going to marry you, if it's that. Some day, in about five years, I'll pick me awife who's rich and beautiful, and I won't give a hoot if she's a virgin." He offered her his flash. "Who cares?"

Zelda gulped a little of the whisky, and shuddered. She did not see how anyone could like it, or enjoy the sickish disziness that went with it, but people thought you were a wet-blanket unless you drank.

"If you loved me," she said, "I wouldn't care about anything."

She could never understand later why he refused to say he loved her, of to make any pretense of it., Perhaps it was a matter of pride with him. Perhaps he had more honesty than she suspected.

During the three months she knew him, she went out listlessly with other men so that her parents would not begin asking questions. In the end they came home from the movies and found her necking with Morgan in the living room. Since they were no earlier than Zelda expected them, she thought afterward that perhaps subconsciously she had wanted to be discovered.

Her mother came up when she was in bed and talked with her in the dark. She was a large woman, bigger than her husband, with a broad, plain face which only recently she had taken to improving with a little powder and a light shade of lipstick. Zelda, watching her struggle to find the proper words, felt a rush of love and pity for her. Poor Mother, she thought. She doesn't understand anything about me at all.

"I've always heard what goes on with young people today," Mrs. Lisbon said, "but I didn't think my girls—I always taught you to be good, and that a man wouldn't respect you if you let him—and I thought I could trust you . . ."

"I haven't done anything," Zelda said softly. She lay back on her pillow and wondered why she felt nothing except a vague relief. "I mean, I haven't done anything."

Her mother's hand went to her chest in an awkward, familiar gesture. "Well, I should hope not," she said. "How can you even—? It's had enough that you—" She stopped and gathered her words again. "I never liked that Riley boy I told your father I thought he drank, but your father said you wouldn't go out with him if he did."

Oh, God, Zelda thought, they're so innocent, so trusting. She rolled over on her stomach and began to cry. Her mother kissed her and pushed the damp hair from her face. "What's the matter, baby? Do you love him?"

"I don't know," Zelda sobbed. "Everything's so-se awtul."

Her mother went on stroking her hair. After a time, she said, "You could go and stay with Marcia in New York for a while. Would you like that?"

Tony had gone off to play golf, and Zelda was alone on the terrace with the Sunday paper. The sun was hot, but it was a little blowy for June and she had trouble keeping the pages from fluttering.

There was so much to wade through on Sunday, and she cometimes decided to let it go, but she never did. She felt guilty if she omitted anything but the financial section and the classified ads, though she could not imagine why. If she had had any free will about it, which she apparently did not, she would have read the magizine and book sections, looked as the store ads, and thrown the rest away, catching up with the news on Monday when it would not be such a chore to find it.

She was carefully reading the obituaries, wondering why the list was always longer on Sunday than any other day—did more people regularly die on Saturday?—when Ann came out. She was in pajamas and a seersucker robe and her hair was up in curlers. Without make-up, her face looked childish and rather plain, and Zelda could see a resemblance to her mother which completely disappeared under powder and lipstick. There was a long crease, an imprint from the pillow, down one of Ann's cheeks.

"Hi," she said. "Bill call?"

Zelda shook her head. "Ann, you shouldn't come out here in your pajamas. People will see you."

"So what? I'm a lot more dressed than in a bathing suit." She kessed Zelda affectionately. "Mm-mmm, you've got such nice soft skin. Bill's is getting all, bristly."

"That's an odd comparison," Zelda said.

It never occurs to her that I might not like her to know how Bill's skin feels against hers, she thought. We all take it for granted that she does know, and that it's all right. Once Zelda had objected because Ann and Bill always parked in the driveway in Bill's father's car after he brought her home from a date, and giggled and talked at the tops of their voices.

"It isn't fair to disturb people at that hour of the night," Zelda had said.

Ann had looked at her with her peculiarly limpid gaze. She had amber-colored eyes, like no one else in Zelda's family or Tony's—a charming mutation, Zelda thought.

"You wouldn't want us to park on a public road; would you?"

Ann had asked her. "Wouldn't you rather I necked in my own driveway pni

"Well-" Zelda had responded weakly, "assuming it's necessary to neck at all-"

"Oh, mother! As long a time as Bill and I have been going steady, you wouldn's expect me not to kiss him goodnight, would you?"

Zelda had not dared to ask her whether that was all she meant by necking. She had not wanted to put any ideas into her head. Besides, she had had a feeling that Ann would turn those clear eyes on her and ask, "Well, for goodness sake, what clse?" much as Zelda's mother had said, "Well, I should hope not," when Zelda told her she hadn't done anything with Morgan Riley.

"I'm starved," Ann said now, falling into a canvas chair and stretching bare, sun-tanned legs across the flagstones. Her feet were bare, too, Zelda noticed, and her toenails, which she had not yet started painting for the summer, were not altogether clean. "But I've got to wait for Bill. He's coming for breakfast."

"Wouldn't it be simpler if he lived here?"

Ann giggled. "Not till we're married."

"Oh? And when are you publishing the banns?" .

Ann grinned and stretched her arms high over her head. The summer freckles were coming out on her nose and she looked solid and lytle-girlish, yet on the rare occasions when she dressed up she was miraculously transformed, and Bill might have been her younger brother.

"Probably never," she said lazily. "We're too young to know now what kind of people we want to marry."

"How are you going to find out, if you never date anybody else?"

"We'll be dating other kids next year, when we're both in college—maybe even before that, if we get sick of each other. We'll find out then."

"So you think you may get sick of each other?"

Ann shrugged. "I don't know. How can you tell? We've been going steady almost two years—that's longer than most kids do." For an instant her clear eyes clouded. "Anyhow, I hope if it happens we'll both want to break it off—at the same time, I mean."

"That's an old feminine hope," Zelda said, "but it doesn't often come true." She tried again, knowing it was useless, "That's why you ought to go out with other boys, so if anything happens between you and Rill you won't be stranded."

"I can't, mother," Ann said patiently. "Not while Bill and I are going steady. You know that."

"Then why don't you stop going steady?" Zelda persisted. "As long as you're going to stop in a few months anyhow, when you go to college, wouldn't this be a good time to—?"

"Oh, mother, now?" Ann broke in, as though speaking to a child. "With the whole summer ahead, and the beach parties and the club dances and everything? There couldn't be a worse time."

"You'd get to go," Zelda said. "Other boys would ask you, maybe more attractive boys than Bill—older—"

Ann shook her head. "I'd never be sure. I know how it is for the girls who don't go steady. They sit around before a party waiting for the phone to ring, and then if nobody asks them they pretend they had something better to do, but everybody knows anyhow." At that moment, as if to point up her argument, the phone rang and she scrambled to her bare and slightly soiled feet and ran into the house, yelling, "I've got it!" to no one in particular.

Zelda picked up the paper and went on with the obituaries, but none of the names registered in her mind. She was thinking about Ann, the daughter with whom she had once hoped to share such a deep understanding and sympathy, unlike anything that had ever been possible for a mother and daughter before. After all, there had never been a generation of mothers whose youth had been so rebellious and gay and unforgettable, or whose middle age was so youthful.

But Ann persisted in Miffling and cluding her. In some ways, she was sensible and conventional to such a degree that she seemed to belong in her grandmother's generation, yet her manner of dress, her casual frankness about sex—a frankness that was genuine, not affected like that of the twenties—her weird dating customs were exclusively middle twentieth century.

She was childish, yet, it seemed to Zelda, pitifully old and circumscribed, missing out on all the excitement of hearing the phone ring and not knowing what masculine voice might be at the other end.... What if occasionally she had to pay for it by not having a date at all? That was part of being young, and though Zelda would not have wanted to go back and go through it again—heaven forbid!—she would not have wanted to miss it for anything.

But Ann wanted to miss it. In her desperate clinging to Bill, she was like Jim, going into the advertising business with Tony, though he had no interest in it and no aptitude for it. They sought security as Zelda's generation had sought escape from the established patterns, and to Zelda it seemed sad. Perhaps it was because there were no established patterns any more from which to escape, unless one wanted to go completely overboard and hold up gas stations, or court death with wild games on the highway in hot-rod cats, or take dope.

Tony, alarmed at the stories in the newspapers, had once warned Jim about accepting cigarettes from strangers. He had scarcely begun when Jim had interrupted him, looking at him with the faintly pitying smile that never failed to irright Tony.

"You mean recters?" he had said. "What do you think I am. dad, a i.d.?"

"What, may I ask, is a j.d.?"

"Juvenile delinquent. There aren't any in Underwood Park, as far as I know, unless you want to count Frank Cameron."

Jim had sounded hopeful, as though he would have liked Tony to count Frank Cameron. But Tony and Zelda were all for Frank, who had been born to his parents so late in life that they were more like his grandparents. They had dressed him in short pants until he was almost twelve, and though Zelda sympathized and agreed with their dislike of the custom of long pants for little boys—it made them look like midgets, she thought—you could do nothing much worse to a child than keep him from conforming to the clothing styles of his contemporaries.

But Frank's parents had done worse. They had not allowed him to play rough games or ride in cars unless an adult was driving or have dates with girls. At sixteen, when he was legally old enough to leave school, he ran away, hitch-hiked to California and got a job in a restaurant, and as soon as he was seventeen, he joined the Marines. He was no juvenile delinquent. He was a rebel, and anyone who had been young in the twenties understood a rebel.

Zelda looked up from her paper and kicked a loose piece of flagstone with the toe of her red play-shoe. Patsy, the once-a-week gardener, had laid the terrace outside the dining room six years ago. Everybody in the family loved it out here in warm weather, for lounging or for a dinner of steak, cooked over charcoal on the portable grill. It was cool if you sat under the thick foliage of the dogwood, with warm spots where the sun came through.

The flagstones, though, had not been properly laid and they kept chipping off. Patsy insisted it was because the ground heaved. When Zelda had once suggested it was poor workmanship, his face had turned an alarming purple and he had gabbled at her so fast and violently in Italian that though she had no idea what he was saying, she had been afraid ever to cross him again. He was not much of a gardener, either, continually fulling up seedlings and claiming they were weeds. Tony always said he did it deliberately, because he hated growing things. But there was no use changing. They were used to Patsy, and another gardener would have had other shortcomings. It would be only a matter of changing faces.

Nobody gave really good service any more. The old-fashioned workman, the servant of twenty years ago, who took pride in his work, tried honestly to earn his pay and was respectful to his employers, had all but disappeared. Theoretically, Zelda had always favored more advantages for the laboring class. It infuriated her when her father said it was all Rooseven's fault for the way he had "given Labor its head"; people must have talked that way about Lincoln, she thought, when they had to pay their workers instead of buying them outright. But it was an awful nuisance when nothing was ever done properly and the people who worked for you treated you in such a high-handed, take-it-or-leave-it-manner."

Oh well, Jim could probably fix the broken flagstone; he could fix anything, do anything with his hands. When he was eleven he had built a tool house next to the garage, and they had used it ever since, and at sixteen he had found an old jalopy in a junk yard and fixed it up so it was running still better, she sometimes thought, than their new, eight cylinder, automatic shift job.

"You ought to be an engineer," Zelda had said to him once, while he was still in high school.

He had just shrugged. "It's too tough—too much math."
"What if it is tough? Nothing worth while comes easy."
"I'll find something that does," he had said, and grinned.

He exasperated her beyond endurance sometimes, for she felt that he was capable of so much, yet he seemed to care about nothing very deeply, to have no lasting interests. He had slid through high school with a minimum of study and made Dartmouth only because his father was an alumnus. Zelda was sure he could have been a superior student, but he would not bother. He derided Ann, who worked hard and stood near the top of her class.

"Think you'll remember any of that glup? A year from now you won't know the difference between osmosis and fried chicken, and nobody'll care."

"I'll remember it until the Regents," Ann said.

It was not pure intellectual curiosity that motivated Ann. There was considerable competition in her school for high grades, and it was a mark of prestige to be known as a "brain," as long as you were otherwise normal and not "book happy."

In her day, Zelda thought, school marks and school itself had seemed highly unimportant. Anyone who took it seriously, or who would not cut classes when there was something better to do, was considered the equivalent of a drip. But they had been moved not by an indifference to knowledge, like Jim, but by a superior scorn of formal education. They had believed you could learn much more by reading on your own, by thinking for yourself, by discussion among your contemporaries. Jim, as far as Zelda knew, rarely opened a book, and Ann's reading was all from the mimeographed list prescribed in school.

A horn blew several times from the driveway, and Zelda Jumped to her feet, letting the heavy pile of newspapers slide to the ground. Marcia, she thought. But it can't be, not already, not at 11:30 in the morning. She never gets up until noon.

Yet she was sure it was Marcia, and as she ran around to the other side of the house she felt the mixture of anticipation and misgiving that she always did when she was about to see her sister after a long time. It had been six years since Marcia's second wedding. You never knew what to expect with Marcia.

The first thing she saw was the car, a robin's egg blue convertible, that seemed to stretch the length of the driveway. There was a man at the wheel, but before she could take him in at all, Marcia yelled, "Zell Look at you, Zel, you're skinnier than ever!" and tore open the door and came hurtling across the lawn with her arms out.

She was still attractive, Zelda thought. She was too fat and her hair was too black and she had deep circles under her eyes, but she was still a woman that men would turn around and look at. She had a vitality, an evident zest, for life, that you seldom saw in anybody any more. Her magnificent eyes sparkled like a girl's, and her voice ranged all over the scale when she talked and she had a way of drawing her bright in between her teeth as though she saw or tasted something delectable.

"Oh, Marce, it's good to see you!" Zelda said, hugging her. "I'd almost forgotten."

Marcia held Zelda off at arm's length. "Are you all right, Zel?

Are you happy?"

Zelda laughed. Marcia was here to recover from the break-up of a harrowing marriage—"to forget it all," as Zelda had written when she asked her to come, "in this hectic household of ours, where his one has time to think of anything"—but it was like her to fie immediately concerned about her sister instead.

"I'm fine," Zelda said. "Why shouldn't I be?"

"Well!" Marcia kissed her again. "Come see who I brought along."

She pulled Zelda's hand and ran with her across the lawn, and though she was two years older than Zelda and twenty pounds heavier she was not without grace. Baskethall, Zelda thought. She was the star forward on the school team, and it still shows.

Who was this man, Zelda wondered, who had driven her from Reno and now sat patiently waiting in the car, his head bent over a newspaper? There was something familiar about his back in the Brooks sport jacket.

"Aren't you going to say hello to Zel?" Marcia called, while they were still twenty yards away from him.

He folded the paper and turned around. "I wanted to give you two a chance to cry over each other." He got out of the car and stood smiling, waiting for them to come nearer. "How are you, Zelda?"

"Lex!"

Mercia squeezed her arm. "I found him in Rend-can you bear it? He got his divorce two days before I got mine, and when he heard, where I was going he insisted on vaiting and driving me Eart. He's in line for some big job in Washington. I didn't pay much attention, but it sounds impressive."

Zelda looked at the big, blond man leaning against the car like a New Yorker ad for men's wear or liquor or the latest model convertible. "Are you staying in town, Lex?"

He smiled. He was so damp charming, Zelda thought, always had been. She told herself that she disliked charming men, but she knew it was untrue.

"Marcia thought you might put me up here for a night or two," he said.

Oh, she did, did she? Zelda tried to catch her sister's eye, but Marcia was looking blandly across the lawn. What was she up to with Lex? Didn't she have any sense of the fitness of things? But of course she didn't and never had.

"I'd like to, Lex, really, but my maid would walk right out. She grumbles for days if I have one unexpected guest for dinner. She'd never stand for my suddenly foisting another house guest on her. That's how they are these days."

Lex came away from the car, settling his shoulders into his jacket and looking toward the house. "I'll fix it; I'll talk to her. Where is she? In the kitchen?"

"She doesn't come in on Sundays."

This brought Marcia back to them. "Oh, that's all right then," she said gaily. "Lex can stay tonight, and if your girl objects to him he can leave tomorrow."

"Oh, Marcia, for heaven's sake!" Zelda said. "You know Lex can't stay here. What would everybody think? The kids and everybody? You and your first husband, both guests in my house; after-after everything."

"I never thought you'd get stodgy, Zel," Marcia said.

Zelda seldom lost her temper, but she lost it now. "Stodgyl What's stodgy got to do with it? The last time you and Lex stayed here, when you were married to each other, you fought so that everybody in Underwood Park heard you and knew all about everything that was wrong between you, and now, after another marriage and divorce apiece, you want to stay here in the same house again. How much embarrassment do you think I can—?"

"Zelda's right, Marcia," Lex broke in quietly. "We didn't think."

Marcia shook her head. "I'm sorry." Neither of them looked at Zelda. "I went off half-cocked as usiful."

I'm weak, Zelda thought. I'm a weak sister. All anybody has to do is act ashamed or sorry or unhappy and I'm ready to abandon whatever stand I've taken. That's what's wrong with me, with my life, my relationship with Tony . . .

"Bring the bags," she said to Lex. "You can sleep on the studio couch in the study. It has a good innerspring mattress."

Now I'm even trying to sell it to him, she thought. But he didn't have to be sold. Marcia hugged her and Lex thanked her and they made no pretense of continuing their penitent understanding. They know me. They knew just how to handle me, she thought. They played me for a sucker.

Tony drove up as Lex was taking the bags out of the trunk. He had a fresh sunburn that would turn deep tan in a few hours. It seemed to Zelda that he looked much younger than Lex, who was two years his junior and a great deal handsomer, but who had something in his face that Zelda thought of as "used up."

Tony hoisted his golf bag to his shoulder, squinting at the car and at the man bent over the trunk, and then whooped. "Lex! Lex, you old son of a gun! Where did you drop from?" He grabbed him by the shoulders and they stood grinning at each other.

He was acting like an idiotic back-slapper, Zelda thought. Like a Shriner or something. Ordinarily he never oozed over people or got sentimental about auld lang syne. The first college reunion he had ever attended was this year's, his twenty-fifth, and that had been only because Jim was there.

But she remembered he was always this way about Lex. They had been boys together in New York on Seventh Avenue, in what was now Harlem, before Tony's father had made money and the family meved to Park Avenue. That was the one time of his life about which Tony got nostalgic. Seventh Avenue had been like a small town, and he remembered all the boys who had lived there and the games they had played in the street, one-a-cat and potsy and marbles.

He and Lex had letter up with each other after Tony moved, and the year after Tony entered Dartmouth, Lex had won a scholarship and gone too. They had both been so delighted at the idea of marrying sisters, Zelda thought, but it hadn't lasted long, not, anyway, as against the lifetime it mentioned in the marriage ceremony. Fourteen years. But it was hard to think of Marcia married to one man for even fourteen years.

"How long are you staying?" Tony was asking Lex. "If I'd known you were coming, I'd have tried to fix it so I could take my vacation while you were here. I can't, now—too many of my men are away.

"I have to be in Washington Wednesday—I'll tell you about that later—and then I thought I'd come back to New York and take in a few shows" Lex laughed. "I sound like a hick, don't,' I? But I haven't been in New York in almost three years. Think of it!"

Zelda went ahead into the house with Marcia. "How are the kids?" Marcia asked. "I'm dying to see them."

"They're fine," Zelda said absently. "Jim's out somewhere with his girl and Ann's around—she's having a friend for breakfast; you'll see them later."

In the guest room, Marcia promptly collapsed on the bed, her silk suit (which had cost $150 if it had cost a penny, Zelda thought) heedlessly creased under her and wrinkling up another knees. They were not fat knees. She had the legs of a young woman, shapely and firm.

"Ye gods, I'm tired!" she said. "Lex routed me out at eight o'clock this morning, and I hardly slept a wink last night. We stayed at one of those awful motels, with cars coming and going all—"

"Marcia. You didn't stay at a motel with Lex?"

Marcia laughed. "Don't be such a mother hen, Zel. Are you worried about my honor? I'm forty-five years old and so is Lex. Do you think anybody cares?" She yawned and closed her eyes.

[25]

£.

"But I didn't sleep with him, if that's what's on your mind. We didn't even have adjoining cabins; the place was too filled up."

Zelda looked down at her sitter. She appeared much older when you couldn't see the eyes that gase her whole face animation. Forty-five years old, fifteen pounds too heavy, but still with a man in tow, still talking about sleeping with him, even if it was only to say she hadn't. She never came out of the twenties, Zelda thought, That was her time.

"I stone understand what you want with him, Marce, why you brought him here. You were so glad to get rid of him, after all those years of hell. Why do you want to get mixed up with him again?"

Anyone else wouldn't want any man—for a long time, anyhow. Not after fourteen years of battling with Lex and then five more with alcoholic who had no desire to be cured.

"I've always been crazy about Lex," Marcia said, with her eyes still closed. "It wasn't his fault that we couldn't get along; it wasn't anybody's. There was just some kind of chemistry between us that set us off—and that made us fall for each other; too. He's sweet, Zel." She smiled gently. "He asked me on the way up if I'd marry him again. He says he's never given a hang for anybody else, and he knows now, after that buch he was married to, what he lost when he lost me. He was going to look me up when he got back from Reno, and he thinks it's Fate that we found each other there."

Zelda sat down on the edge of the bed. "You sound like Ann—or the way I'd expect Ann to sound, though she never does; she's far too sensible. Marce," she said, taking her sister's fine-boned hand, "you wouldn't be such a fool, would you, as to go back to Lex?"

"No. But he is sweet when you aren't living with him." She yawned again and opened her eyes. "Let me take a map for an hour, okay? Then I'll come down and see the kids and we'll talk." She squeezed Zelda's fingers. "It's good to be here—it was swell of you to tak me."

Zelda stood up. "Don't you want to take off your suit?"

"To hell with it. I'm too tired." She kicked off her shoes and rolled over. "I don't have so morry about the suit. Poor Willie Tayner's paying for all I can buy. It's no good to him, anyhow—the moriey, I mean precipit for liquor. The less he has, the less he'll be able to drink, the poor guy..."

She was almost asleep as she said the last words. Zelda covered her with an afghan and went out quietly. It was wonderful, the way Marcia could sleep, as quickly and easily as she had as a child. She herself either lay awake for hours or woke in the middle of the night and could not get back to sleep. Half the time she had to take something, or she would have been too fagged out to do anything the next day, and a nap was impossible. No matter how tired she was, she could not sleep in the daytime.

The importance of her problems seemed to have nothing to do with it at all. During the first precarious years after Tony had started his own agency, the time when Ann had been desperately sick with scarlet fever, when it had looked as thought Jim might be yanked out of school and sent to Korea, and when she had thought she might have to leave Tony, she had always been sure, each time, that if it came out all right she would never worry about anything again. But of course she did. The nights could be just as endless when you were worrying about how to propose a change in the school budget at the next open meeting, or what to serve at a dinner party when one of the key guests had ulcers. When you didn't have big troubles, you made the little ones do.

Tony and Lex were out on the terrace with tall glasses. It was better to leave them alone and let them get all their reminiscences and their man-talk out of their systems. She went into the kitchen to see what she was going to feed them all. Sunday, especially in the summer, was a haphazard kind of day, with everyone eating at different hours, and she seldom planned a regular dinner. But there was usually a baked ham, or something precooked in the freezer.

Everything was so much simpler than when she had started keeping house. Most women could not find enough to keep them busy around the home any more and now it was beginning to seem as though that was a ball thank his them, and that they and their children had been happing and belief of in the old days when mothers were always these baking cookies, that had not come from a ready-mix package, when the kids came home from school.

But you could not stop mechanical or scientific progress, plough it under like potatoes, so that people would be happier. You had to reach them how to be happy with the progress, how to haring it and keep up with it. There ought to be social scientists, the designt, working hand in hand with the atomic boys, working the methods for preparing us to adjust to a flw age.

Anathan Bill were sitting at the kitchen table, their egg-encrudel plates pushed aside, their elbows resting on toast crumbs. And had changed into a checked shirt and jeans which almost matched Bill's Hawaiian print shirt and dungarees. She had a berchief around her head, through which the outlines of her ship anck knobbily, and most of her lipstick had come off with ice is akfast. Bill needed a shave. They looked, Zelda thought, e a course that had been married a long time and no longer somered to keep up appearances for each other. I-would not heve surprised her if they had been talking about the high cost of Beck

We were outlandish enough in the twenties, heaven knows, has at least we thought we were glamorous—at least we tried ... Hello, you two," she said. "Why don't you go out and get some of this fine June weather?"

Ann looked amused. "We will, after a while." To Bill she said, "My mother has a mania for fresh air and sunshine, you know."

"Yeah?" Bill got belatedly to his feet, a gangly blond boy with Thig-boned, unfinished-looking face. "Hi, Mrs. Halliday."

"I suppose Ann's right. I suppose it is a mania," Zelda said, leaning against the wall, trying to talk easily to this undesponsive. unsmiling boy with whom she had been acquainted ar so long and did not know at all. "When Jim and Ann were babies, everybody had the idea that in spall would grow up healthy if it was deprived of partition of sunlight. We lived in the city then, you know, and on white Thursdays when the maid was off I used to wheel the carriage grimly up and down Central Park for hours. I'd have frozen to death rather than go indoors one minute before the sun went down."

She supposed that every generation had its health mastas. Her mother's had been on the subject of intestinal regularity, even when she was away from home, up until the time she went to New York to stay with Marcia, Zelda had been expected to reassure her mother on this matter by mail. The threat of a mysterious, often fatal malady known as auto-intoxication and hung over her childhood, together with the sickly-sweet that of a patent medicine called Syrup of Figs.

"Today," she said to Bill, "everybody's vitamin-crazy."

He laughed politely, but she knew he was not amused. She thought she had told the anecdote rather well, but Bill stood there wishing she would go, exactly as she had wished that the mothers of her friends would go. Though she felt so close to her own youth, she was no nearer a rapport with him than she had been with them.

"Sit down, Bill," she said. "I have to see what's on hand for dinner." She opened the refrigerator and peered inside at the heavily-laden chromium shelves. There was half a turkey left from the night before; it would be enough, with some tongst and potato salad from the delicatessen, and, for dessert, sponge layers filled with frozen strawberries and whipped cream. "Did you know Aunt Marcia has come, Ann? She's taking a nap."

"I know. I saw Lex. What's he doing here, anyhow?"

Zelda sjammed the refrigerator door. "I'm not sure," she said, As she went out into the dining room she heard Bill say, "That's a square name, Lex. I never heard it."

"It's for Alexis," Ann explained. "Alexis Whittons He's my aunt's first husband."

Jim's jaloby soured into the driveway, and a spinute later Zelda heard his voice on the terrace. Then he came in to mix himself a Tom Collins. He would drink one maybe, if he stayed around long enough, two. During the heart to he stayed around in college he had done some fairly desired drinking and then given it up because he said there didn't seem to he much point in it.

"Hi, most!" He put one arm around her and squeezed her, grinning at her as though she were a girl. He looked as if he had head withming; his dark curly hair was wet and his face was thinburned. He was full of vitality and good spirits and maleness, and it occurred to Zelda that in many ways he was a mastrice counterpart of Marcia, but with none of her advince our spirit. Half the time he exasperated her almost uneradirably, and the other half, as now, she loved him almost uneradirably.

You smell like the Sound," she said, sniffing at his check and their pushing him away. "Fishy. How can you go in this early?

It must have been freezing."

"he was. I just took a dip, but it's never too cold for Libby. She'd be in yet if I hadn't dragged her out." He took a bottle of gin from the bar. "Make one for you?"

"Okay."

He measured the liquor carefully into two glasses. "I didn't know Lex was coming."

"Neither did I. Aunt Marcia bumped into him in Reno and he drove her here. He's only staying overnight."

"Isn't that sort of a—?" He stopped while he went into the kitchen for ice cubes and then came back and dropped them into the glasses, along with the gin and the Tom Collins mix. He spoke again while he was stirring vigorously, above the sound of the cubes rattling against the glass. "It's funny they'd want to stay here together, isn't it? I wouldn't think you'd like it much."

She said, "I don't," and felt very close to him because he, alone of all of them, seemed to perceive the situation as she did. "But I couldn't refuse to have him. After all, he's a good friend, aside from having been married to Aunt Marcia. Jim," she said impulsively, feeling that this was the right moment, the moment when they must understand state when "you don't really want to go into addressing, do work was the work. I mean?"

He handed her has drink and spod holding his swithing the ice around. "Sure," he said. "Why not?"

"The point isn't so much 'why not?" She sat down on one of the Hepplewhite dining room chairs. It was important not to let herself become annoyed or angry, to talk objectively to him as though the were not his mother. She looked un at him and smiled. "The point is 'why?' Jim. It isn't your field at all. You've always been mechanically minded, good with your hands. The way you designed and built the tool house when you were only a little boy, and practically made your own car and configuration thing. How are you going to use that talent in the advertising business?"

He gave her the superior smile, but there was no rancor behind it. There was no rancor in him. Maybe it would have been herter if there had been, if he could have got worked un bout 'something, almost anything.

"What do you want me to do, mom?" he asked her: "Work in a garage?"

"At least you'd be fitted for it." Her voice had risen and her heart was beating too fast. She waited a minute. "No We didn't send you to college to work in a garage. There are all kinds of opportunities for a boy with your ability—it's a mechanical age. You could still go into some kind of engineering, switch your courses next year-" She was floundering now, aware that. she was not really clear on this. She had had a vision of him in hip boots and a battered hat, shouting orders to men on a halffinished bridge. . . . or sitting at a large desk in a streamlined office with an awesomely intricate blueprint rolled out before him -Mr. James Halliday, distinguished undustrial designer. She said. "It's not too late."

"Sure it is, mom. I couldn't get all that math and stuff in a year. Anyhow, I wouldn't want to. Why knock myself out? Dad wants me in with him, and it's okay with me."

She looked up at him. But do you mally think you'll like it?"

"Not too much it gives. He principle then his distributed and then sat down inclusions table from the "The way a stable at it, any longers to be just a job since a white. You done the at you just do it. At least if I'm with dad I won't have to patiety, or wait in infillion; years to get something out of it."

The do you want out of it?" she asked carefully, I have no right the angry, she thought. It's his life.

house anybody want? Money," he said, "so I can have a house worry about. I'd like to stalk long before I'm as old as dad, though, and maybe travel and to just take it easy."

Deer Libby fit into this-this idyl?"

hen the time comes, when I'm all set. What do you

The sire you in love with Libby?" she asked. "Really? I dinged at her. "Now, mom," he said. "Now, mom, there"

Estate pour go prying again, he meant, trying to find out what specific pader my skin, when you know you never can: "Come on moon," be said. "Bring your drink and let's go out on the person with dad and Lex."

She shook her head. "Not now. You go along."

Don't be like that, mom."

The not being like anything. Aunt Marcia will be awake in a few minutes and I want to go up and talk to her."

"Still yourself." He walked toward the door and then burned around and came back. "Mom," he said, "it will be all right." She had no idea what he was trying to tell her, what reassurtice he was giving her, but for the moment it did not matter. She trached up and pulled his head down to her and kissed him. "Olary," she said. "Okay."

He went out, and she poured the rest of her Tom Collins into much for sin anyway. After anothibition was repealed, she had not introduct is fee year. Management how good it was, or how disguisted in sweet standard seasons. For obtaining their had made in the seasons of the standard with alcohol and nation berries and satisfact alled Stronger Orange Plower Water (they had never beth able to discover whether there was a Water Orange Plower Water) which they mixed with Nedick's orange drink from the stand around the corner.

The Studio. That was the way she and Marcia had a talked about it and the way Zelda always thought of it—in the letters. Zelda had taken refuge there with Marcia, just the sister was taking refuge with her now.

Marcia had said to her at the station, the day she arithmed in New York from Framington: "There's not a thing to experiment the Studio. I'm broke till I get paid tomorrow. You have notice, haven't you? Let's go to a drugstore and have a bite." She said taken zelda's suitcase in one hand and her arm in the others it's good to see you, kid. You almost make me homestake son know that?" Her brilliant eyes had tears in them, and the was moved, even though she knew how easily Marcia them came. "What happened, anyway? What ever persuaded them to let you come?"

"It was mama's idea," Zelda said. "She had a little treather with papa at first; he said New York was no place for two grids alone, but she told him it was a better place for two than for one, and the thought it would be nice for you to have company from hoogs for a while."

"That's funny," Marcia said. "She was the one who almost had a fix about me coming. It was papa who said to let me said if I was so set on it."

They walked arm in arm across the vast station floor. Marcia looked different, Zelda thought, like a real New Yorker in only eight months. She wore a black coat and a black clocke hat that Zelda thought was extremely chic. Her own carnel's hair coat and roman striped scarf secured hap who was going to live in a "Well," she said. Well a

She tele distinctly soppositicated in the taid this has been a small think piel. Already the bleak pain over Morgan, who had never even called her to find out how she had fared with her parents that product, was subsiding in the excitement of being lines.

She at her sharply. "What kind of mess?" She her voice, although none of the people hurrying to and from trains was near enough to hear. "You mean a real.

Adoshed and reached for her suitcase. "Here, there's no by you should carry that. I'm not crippled or any-

Fre my guest," Marcia said, impatiently jerking the bag

L'behind her, "Well, answer me."

instant Zelda considered elaborating on the affair to that it had indeed been a real mess. She had a feeling said give her stature in her sister's eyes. But she knew soo poor a liar to carry it off.

the murmured, "he wasn't really in love with me, you and to I-well, L couldn't."

Marianodded. "It's our upbringing. We're full of inhibitions, and it likes time to overcome them." Zelda wondered whether Marcia had overcome them, but she could not bring herself to sister certainly did not look the same, though it suight have been only her clothes, and some kind of stuff on her eyes that made them seem bigger and more brilliant than ever. Tell me what happened." Marcia said. "Who was the fellow?"

Zelda told her, changing things just a little, so that she aboeased have been more pursued than pursuing. "He couldn't keep away from me. I knew the folks would be home any minute, but he wouldn't listen. Afterwards, mama came up and lectured

"I know," Marcia said. "All about how you have to keep yourself for the space you marry, been a fellow won't respect you if you let him tend the self-been won't respect you are the self-been to be out with your

She let the search to be becomed to Zelda to stand with the behind two garls who were down to their Danish pastry will enfect Zelda, who had eaten on the train, a box lunch of her mather's case fried chisken, was not hungry. She thought this pastry locked dry and the coffee watery, and the rag with whether to the fountain boys wiped off the counter appeared gray and unimitary. A wave of homesickness swept over her.

"Pinkie saw that show, 'Saturday's Children,' last week the girl in front of her said. "She says it's real good. You want to go to the matinee Saturday?"

"I don't know," the other girl answered. "I'm sort of bridge.
"We can get fifty-five cent seats. I don't mind the balcony, do you? Sometimes you can see better from the balcony.

The girl considered a minute. "Well, all right," she

"What theater's it at?"
"The Booth. My office is near there.

"The Booth. My office is near there, so I'll get the transfer you want."

in Framington a show meant the moving pictures, playing constinuously every day from eleven in the morning until religious, at the Bijdu on Main Street. There was also the River Street Playing the but it never exhibited anything but serials, and cobody nice went there, just toughs. Some of the wealthier religious traveled "down to New York" once a year to take in the playing but the only play Zelda had ever seen, outside of presentations by the high school drama society, was something called, "Come Out of the Kitchen," given in the awn hall, where nobody back of the sixth row could hear anything, by a fourth-rate stock company that had never visited Frami

Marin and into the vacated stools, warm seere going to see "Saturday's Children," and the ked the gray rag over the places where t karce!" Zelda whispered. "Isn't New York wonderful?" Treally changed her mind from that moment of Studio gave her only a temporary sethack. She had something large and high-ceilinged, with a scylight which the rays would pour in a spectacular cone of light which a chair would stand, with some fabric, brocade, or red velvet, draped carelessly across its back-and n aisley smock, standing before her easel in the fire room, with her palette on her arm.

die was on the top floor of a rickety building the West There was no skylight, only one large window, many not a small room, but the double studio couch and the tables and the chairs—two of them overstuffed is things bulging out of their cretonne slipcovers. Councied ind the model stand, made of a packing crate line an corner. Zelda had forgotten the necessity to alling icuts in this atcher. The bathroom was believed a and the idea of cooking there, on a two-burner shietric rested on a board placed across the bathtunisment whickly got used to it. Marcia had a party in Literation wit she arrived. There were no lights except from candles, igns dishes with melted wax and placed on the windowthe tables. On the model stand there was a finge wase, reactived that see the faded place on the blue sepsio couch which had put batik scarfs over the tables to lide their numerius debt and relative and shifted some of the dozen or so little to the same of the gradual states and the flow there most of the gradual states are to the same and the same with three bands of white the same are to the bands of the bottles to prove they had not need the formal states of changing the contents. Another man, will be and the same booked as if it had been bleached and marcelles as the same of the same way she had imagined Greenwich Village would be. More guests were artists, students at various schools around and they argued continually about what they called "form whether sayone's nose really looked purple in certain light

"If I see it purple," a small, shrill girl said, "that's how."

it. I don't care how anybody else sees it."

"Well, it all comes down to what you think Art is else utilized. "I mean, is it just something personal that notified but the artist, or is it some sort of community twentill artist and the world?"

The had a long, noisy discussion about what Art wall which the whisky was passed around frequently and presindividual paper cups. One couple took cushions and of too dark corner of the room, where they sat among canvally that were propped against the wall and tell close with ang embrace. Some of the others did not both dering one.

A self-with very short curly hair and an angelic, oliveration face the self-with her feet and shouted, "Watch! Watch now are body? Sale of the post of a posched egg," She went incredible in and there is her arms ooze slowly out from her sides; as holding this pose for a second, she straightened up and holding this pose for a second, she straightened up and holding this pose for a second, she straightened up and holding this pose for a second, she straightened up and holding this pose for a second, she straightened up and holding this pose for a second, she straightened up and holding this pose for a second, she straightened up and holding this pose for a second, she straightened up and holding this pose for a second, she straightened up and holding this pose for a second, she straightened up and holding this pose for a second, she straightened up and holding this post of the second that it is the second that it

Zelda thought if was a left the strained when accompy laughed, and the strained barry and the considerate, of course," he said impatiently and of the said on the said in the had not contact or the said and the said of th

the field her later that Stanislavsky was an actor, depending the filter from the Moscow Art Theater, and that every dependent of the first student in New York thought he was was depthiled as a studying his methods. If you could imagine yourself the studying his methods. If you could imagine yourself the studying as remote as a poached egg, apparently you had the later of acting.

prody in the room did something, painted or acted or poerry, or at least knew all about such things. Zelda felt is and a little gross, but at the same time she was thrilled all these talented people.

with a van dyke, a scarf around his neck instead of a suit and sat down next to her. "I'm Paul Waverly," he said.

The studio across the hall. You're Marcia's suiter aren't

The bolted at him angrily. He was very young not much that to."

The bolted at him angrily. He was very young not much that the beard could not hide it. "Thow to you know?" she asked him. "How do you know?" the asked him. "How do you know that tan't happen to think her work is marvelous."

throughed. "She could do better with a camera Robe of Brigile can point. They don't even try much."

Signat you, I suppose.".

Based fine," he agreed. He had on a threadbare peker, from the based of which he took out a thin solid gold citatrette case. In the bathroom the based of the everybody was out and there was time to get rid of the state of the state of the poly. "You see, it's did not the state of the

to be good, interes I want to go into the best water

the factor and gathered now, had something to do the second several days had been bounted out to her the Waverly Building on The second several days had been bounted out to her the Waverly Building on The second several days had been been several days been several

The stilled at her. "Can you imagine me a real estate into "T don't know. I don't know you well enough to say."

"No, probably not." One of the bottles of whisky came and five powers a drink for her and himself. "Anyhow thing else being equal, where's the challenge? I'm A. M. ly's son, so it's all nice and easy for me and I make a lot of automatically. You see it, don't you? I mean, what will prove that way?"

Zelde took a gulp of her drink. It tasted just as terrible as any Protteg whisky she had ever drunk. She began a little diagy, so that Paul's face seemed vague, detached as ing in a cloud of smoke.

Think it's wonderful," she said, "that you feel like the Tile Jame with the mandolin was singing, "Blue Skies, girl who had understood the essence of a poached egg did in the mandolin of the floor. All at once she began unburious her described accompanied by applause and shrieks, but it is the could be subjected out on the floor. Somebody picked and and the floor one end of the couch, and Zelda went and bust the up again.

father a mount is a man have everything because he interest father a miner?" someone asked, "and those who work have so miner less? The wealth ought to be shared."

"There wouldn't be enough to go around. Everying

th make people who are doing all nd hard for what they've got and like the it all up? Stick a gun in their ribs, may all around the world, sticking guns in peor wer got a better world yet with guns."

just a reactionary, that's all."

ords flowed over Zelda and were gone. She could not who in the room was speaking, and when all the talk ind someone biew out the candles she was scarcely aware the back of her brain, like voices from the bettom of the several thoughts came to her . . . that the whisty had reis was, that she had better be careful. Bown on the couch, next to the posched eg he Paul sat next to her. he whispered. He began lightly stroking by sweet, you know that?"

about this reminded her of Morgan Hile arm away, but he only moved closer, to win arm again, and went on stroking it you read Companionate Marriage 1 he asking an odd moment to discuss books. Sh me out," he said. "You ought to read He says people should get married and work they can both agree it's all by dimony, no nothing. As long as ther mead it," he said again, and put his Pry sweet. I'd like to have a control ushing under struggling on the couch. He was to Morgan Riley, and he would not believe the to get away from him. Her brain w she thought of screaming, but it would The screamed-this Paul Waverly was her go her off to an awfully bad start. The little afraid of a man. in she whispered to Paul. "Please." range voice spoke close by, not whispering, and I speciality across the couch, away from her.

Lieve the Kid alone," the voice said casually, with A tall man stood over them in the darkness until Paul bi bled an and disappeared into the gloom of the room. down next to Zelda. The poached egg girl, in the cushions, stirred and moaneds in all right?" the man asked Zelda. her arms tight across her chest to stop her Yes, thank you," she said. She tried to make ther, but all she could see was the outline of rided chin. "He seemed so nice, at first. "H no go into the real estate business because I thought he-" the shadowy man broke in. "He's all long as he doesn's have a bottle in one ther, he's fine. He just doesn't know w that's all." He turned his face to sister, aren't you? You're not mit Min mean ?" I don't know about the looks, The Madw. I don't know your name."

"She's only two yes

me right, we weren't formally introduced, were Whitton, Alexis Whitton. People call me Lean shed the dishes she and Bill had used for breaking and them. The egg plates were very hard to wash because socked them first, the way she knew you were supordo. Now, of course, she wished she had bothered. It separation when you had kept your desk in order when you were the something important and had to pull everything apart Lit. You knew you would have saved time and trouble by interextra work in the first place, but still you went on want to drive down to the beach this afternoon.

f can get the car?"

Know. Maybe later. I want to stick around a while and surprised. She never wanted to stick around. What

The said again. "Curiosity, I guess. This family with Lex staying here. And I'd like to see Aung was not altogether sure herself why any of the tabilly she moved in a world of her own, apple hi lived in the household, or those who came and what they did and said affected the when remarked that a murder could be out the body personally. But the idea a sum's here hisband, and the two of them strong here "Why don't a dish and handed it to BILL vay where it belonged, and she felt warma had he was going to stick around, because third out to be pretty dull after all, just another with the of adults. That was the thing about Bill-right on him. said when they were still married, and it was strictly She hoisted herself up to the counter, though she k mother didn't like her to sit there, and Bill stood in fife listening, twirling the dish towel. "I was only a kid; member it. They yelled at each other all the time, with dows open and everything, and honestly I'd feel awful when I saw the other kids. I was alraid they'd think it and dad."

"leez!" he said. "Yeah!"

Tou could tell Bill anything, and he'd know how you had a row with the family, or a teacher gave you mark or even if something happened with one of the didn't have to draw a diagram for him.

harmon, they got divorced after that, and then both married somebody else, but it was it beind turned out to be an alcoholic, and she had Amonymous and in hospitals and everyt any good. And his wife was always sleen

Bill said. "They're a great couple of picker not kidding. And now they turn up t goes on?", She jumped down from the her hand into his. "Well, let's take a walk de he mom said. Oh, wait!" She put her hold kendnief around her head. "They'll his Marie comb out my hair first pin-curls every night. Her thinkier in pin-curls every night. Her thinkier in the property of the property of sinewed her lipstick, choosing one of a dozen different of dressing-table, and ran back downstairs. If her had her way, she probably would have had to put the go for a walk with Bill. That was a good way to the get all dressed up for him all the time as it you have an impression on him. Not that there was little of scaring Bill off any more. They didn't have impression on each other any more either. They didn't have impression on each other any more either. They didn't have impression on each other any more either. They didn't have a good at the little while before it had been stiff with from the stiff with from the story. Ann said. "I don't care how hot it good at the speak for a minute. "We'll have a good at the story we'll have a good at the story."

He grouned which the

the way some boys got. She knew what the way some boys got. She knew what the good summer, because it might be their same against it might never be the same against the senior promethe saked him. It had the senior promether away now. The same against seemed so far away now. The same against seemed so far away now. The same against seemed so far away now.

Helf windink he'll histow that." She was allent a minute the figured he might as well get it over with the probably and the probably are for long if he did, so why not get in and out the probably are for long if he did, so why not get in and out the probably are for long if he can start out in business with the probable of hanging over his head."

She glanced & him sideways. "You sound as if you'd do it too."

"Well, I don't know," he said. "There's another angle could be better by the time we're through college, so we into it?" He paused. "If they don't get worse and I do yanked out of coilege."

two walked on without speaking. All this had been two walked on without speaking. All this had been two walked in a way maybe she was lucky, Ann thought your by the time Bill would probably have to go, she may think a way too bad, the way she would about anything the way she would lave not book any vet maybe, all through with his services and didnighted to meet anybody else.

the matter?" He turned and looked at her,

Why?"

He grinned at her. "See a hear, or some hand, I we have a hear, or some hand, I we have a hear, or some hand, I we have a hear, or some hand, at him. "I wo hears. A high hard, as if at something very free make each other laugh. Ann had here hefore she and Bill started."

at the same

were hare a large sale about the kept explaining the atomic theory is the kept explaining the was a brain in school. In the end, of the kept explaining the kept explaining the kept end of the kept explaining the atomic theory is the kept explaining the kept explaining the kept explaining the atomic theory is the kept explaining the k

Bill, she could really relax. There was never any mouble to him, because they were interested in the same things, was something like photography, which was Bill's hobby thich didn't particularly send her, or Steinbeck, who was her applied but who Bill thought was strictly from stantation, when they were hared where was no warding off to worry about. They had been other too long. At the end of a date at higher hill where to stop, because they had had it all out in the begin-tide agreed that they were too young to fool arbitration too the take any chances. You had your whole life salted of you didn't want to mess things up when you salted they had anyhow, she couldn't see that there was the salted.

Libbry in the car with Jim this morning. They be by Bill said now. "I chought that was all off the lawys on-again, off-again with those the lawys on-again, off-again with those the law is the for Easter he was talking about getting as the law in the law in the law in the law is the Junior prom, but she wouldn't go is the law in the law is the law is the law in the law is the law is the law is the law is the law in the law is the law is the law in the law is the law is the law is the law is the law in the law is the law is the law in the law is the law is the law is the law is the law in the law is the law is at Brisis les sees waste and the pariet one who was at the beach

the first got back to the house, everyhold to meet a lot of family all a second them and called to her.

Ann muttered to Bill under her breath his starcia did not say how much she had grown. Shows then held her off and said, "Darling, you look that," and when Bill was introduced to her she stared at his smiled, that in an embarrassing way at all; there was some flattering about it. "Hi," she said then, and held out her "Hi," she said then, and held out her man she liked. Bill remarked afterwards that he thomas was streetly O.K.

Lies platted the glider next to him. "Come on, Annie,"

She went and sat between him and her father. She extract heat both been drinking quite a lot, because their extract hoose. Somehow she didn't mind the look in Length hand him seem strange through he was sometimes in a had humor when he had hand a drink always put him in a better one feet and humor.

Thave you been, Annie?" he asked her. "I we have the mint on of my Tom Collins."

it was silly for dad ag as the was the was silly for dad ag as the was the was took a walk," she said.

The methoding next to Marcia's chair, leaning of to he was the was saying. He wasn't talking we seemed a way as he wasn't talking to get away as he wasn't wich in each hand. "They re tell you how long ago I made them mil" Marcia said with her mouth full. Fin starved. I haven't had a mouthful thed. "Marcia has never had a mouthful to sat's why she's nothing but skin and bones." e a face at him. "You're not very gallant." them, taking them in with her eyes in a way? d'in front of her mirror later but couldn't d some kind of psychiatric reason, you know. ne much weight." el You need a psychiatrist less than anybody not in her sarcastic tone at all, but sort of gentle e much, that's all." mind, Marcia," dad said. "You've still pote He took the platter and passed it has her one." and at her aunt. They were always talking e had been as a girl, and they thought sive. Ann couldn't see it. It was the said nges the family thought were attractive we sybody in school went for. The only this was her eyes. She really had beautiful Penole must have had different ideas where." Lex said, "that in poor con timilies and not enough food to a folks in the snow for the winter and being good as even Same pr

gone, Marcia winked at Ann and with her thumb and forefinger. "You e a little talk." she said. inted to get away now, but she didn't know alinost nothing, and if she left without "botto they were likely to speak to her about it. and intelligent and there was no reason group of adults like a mummy. It was what anyhow. Dad was a little more relaxed ale What Ann wondered, did they want her to con-I like it here," Lex said. He stretched out his sheed back and closed his eyes. "I wish I didn't ganington." him what she hoped was an alert, interes Eyou going to Washington?" mont a job. They want me to watch the Par no one steals it." ighed politely. Out of the corner of her eye ek with Marcia's glass, and she thought of saying that they had to leave, but she could wondered why she had ever thought an here. She might have realized she'd get by to get away. No matter how many time this, she never knew-how to get away. "Lex," dad said, though he was certain more, and she had not called him in, "is being modest. He's in line for about it now," Lex broke in. Baset, you know." E" dad said. "Why would mand caught.)

was sipping her delided the minute of the same of the

and that he glass up and squar at a the head with head made the drink right. "For the small has done anybody know?"

Man and not stop to wonder what she meant. She was a said, "I think we will run along. We though the beach for a while."

all right, Annie, if you must," Lex said, "but light with the here overnight, you know."

he was not there only overnight. He stayed until Welines when he went to Washington, and he came back again on day. Ann's mother thought Rena would walk out with all the work, but Rena said Lex was the loveliest general and the probable at all. Mom couldn't find out whether he had been or what. "Probably not," she told dad. "He always inclinerize people."

langhed. "Lex? He's just a good guy, that's all here at breakfast on Friday. Ann was up carly money with Bill before the courts got crowded, but every language also

Tony," mom said, frowning down into you talk about Lex you always sound like a state of the coffee, her third cup. She drank much have mesmerized me have done to ask him to come back here for the light to have done it."

was looking at the ads in the newspaper, the surging. "Why not? He's good company to the about the surging of the surging the surging of the surging the surging of the sur family that baby. she couldn't stand her family. It we at was true. Usually she thought they were monally she got a sort of rush of love for is she really couldn't stand them. It made he was abnormal or something. ent off to play tennis, and when she got back her into her room. She knew this was going to be sarcia had mentioned on the terrace Sunday, and greating it all week. She hated little talks. But the so moking it now. district was brushing her hair at the dressing-table wood dye job, but if you looked closely you was coming in gray at the roots. she said, smiling at Ann in the mirror. blay a pretty good game myself. I was better though." She leaned forward and pulled the ski from the temples and then wrinkled her nose forward on the high school varsity." Ann said. She wondered why older peop bout what they had done when they were made them seem silly, because you could only way they looked now. When Marcia talked of Ann saw her with her middle-aged face and a gym suit, making a set shot from the me your man," Marcia said. eventeen." Bed. "I like him anyhow." She turn re you very much in love with his

is just between two works

kind of the

There and Ann liked her, but the cinemper on love. She knew what her mother to the her room was near the garage. She knew that alipped out of the house the night before the highest and gone for a drive. It she was mixed up with Lex again, her advice city won this for free, Ann," she was saying. "Dog We'd have a good world if everyone was to hable from the time he was born. No one of the's been loved enough himself."

down on the edge of the bed. She did not real what Marcia meant, and yet she had to know, you mean about not rationing love, Annie link kids shouldn't? I mean, say they like ratio of don't know if they'll ever marry each other mane way later on?"

what I was talking about, you know."

The what do you think?" Ann persisted. "Fair what do you think?" Ann persisted. "Fair to work the way. What do you think of the move away. What do you think of the wild kept seeing the girl and her boy-friend the back of a car. She had will them, but she couldn't. Any more than the was beginning to feel the was beginning to feel the way think them, but she was beginning to feel the way think them, but she was beginning to feel the way think them.

the day, Ann thought. She leaned back and yet disappointed. Marcia wasn't a age Nobody ever told you anything, not said you had to decide for yourself, and you ing what they thought you ought to do. when she started using lipstick, before she and the always put it on after she left the house efore she came back in, because she thought i goo young to use it. Then later she found out The same thing had happened with smoking. particularly liked and had stopped as soon Blew she was doing it and weren't going to was always telling her that she and Bill she in all the time, that she ought to go out with Bill was too young for her and not partice thing, but that of course it was up to her. Ann. her mother would say if she ever asked her with kids who didn't wait for marriage. Would for herself? show that girl and boy in the back of me," she said to her aunt. "I was just th thought, that's all. Just in general, I a is had said at the beginning of the con-That's old enough for anything "the army." lways told her mother, and now -avin e didn't know exactly wi sad could ever like anybo soing away to college in the fall, and so a the of each other then," she said. "We're ben I was your age, I wanted everyone to think is the of the world. I'd never have admitted I was the E. mit said. "It probably wouldn't have been true, in the conversation was beginning to make Art, unconsider was relieved when Rena knocked on the door and told the she was wanted on the phone. She got up to me her waved her back to her seat and picked up the aioht table. old." she said. "Oh, Paula, for heaven's sake! Is a saiderhear from you. I was going to call you as stork L. I don't know, exactly-maybe all summer as a matter of fact I've seen him quite recently you ask? ... Oh? Oh, really? Oh, well will the's after in Washington-something in the State I suppose they investigate anyone in line for ber Dellett? Well, I must say that's going a little I haven't seen her in years, have you? Yes, I ale repressioned you, they'll certainly be after me ering me know. I'll give you a ring, maybe at you in town for lunch. . . ." he hung up and sat looking out the window ten Ann was there. Ann put her hands ting sometimes when she could not manage Her stomach felt queer. It was a feeling along time ago—a feeling associated w Mellen. his with that?" she asked. She was. it her must diff not seem a

The state of the s

cigg tid

they've they ye thre got the wrong might give interested Lex was Lexism." She got the wrong might had repeated the word, "Lexism," as if she than good, and then drew the smoke from her come the sher lungs that only a faint wisp escaped. "In puttine thing."

Dellett? You've met her, haven't you? She und work to your father's office."

To said. "No." She shook her head. "I've never!

Zella a leaves went to the private market in the village of days which a set-up just like the big markets, with basket when a basic and shelves full of foods from which help to be set to be a set-up just like the big markets, with basket when the basic and she will be a set-up just like the big markets, with basket when the basic state with the control of the basic state with the basi with the bought in the store or not. Mr. Zucca and great from the corn to be good. Tony couldn't that then or fifteen dollars a month to have sides the last of a dying race, the symbol of that the last of a dying race, the symbol of that told Tony, "we probably mont

er the meions, which is eet like sugar." when she saw Libby eling a basket down the aisle toward he her yet, and Zelda thought of escaping into ment but she was afraid she couldn't without All she had to do was appear unwilling to m would antagonize Jim, perhaps forever. s parents had never worried about antagonizi They had spoken their minds and done as the vas up to the children not to antagonize them. I so much simpler then. You knew what we see a parent, and you told your children to them if they didn't. Now right and what with the individual psyche, and only an expe would have liked to express herself on the dorman, but she was sure she never would he enviling especially the matter with Libby Efrom a nice family. It was just that Zelda co wisew her now, and came pushing the basket My, Mrs. Halliday," she said, in her unum inior College accent, "I didn't know you at an all-day League of Women Voters in Nor this." She laughed softly. "I didn't m was not at all pretty, but she had attractive d dark skin and very dark blue eyes, and excellent. Tony said she was what built," an expression that Zelda to he so that meeting my she took the second of the sec

the Sale for almost two years," Libby said. "I was just in the January." She stood wheeling the market baskes and state, not nervously but with a kind of rhythmic in There was nothing in her attitude to suggest that she, like young people, was eager to get away from a tiresome middle woman. She was too poised for a girl of nineteen, Zelda thou She hahaved like a woman of experience, but doubtless is only a manner, taught at Junior College. "I hear Ann's going be an anattant counselor at the day camp this summer." She managed thing closer to Jun now. In a minute she would be in his frame very naturally and casually. "That'll be a nicht for inc."

think it will," Zelda said. "What are your plans for supplier?"

The string to work in my father's office." She smiled, she tilly, white teeth. Zelda, for some reason that she was to to the slaws associated such teeth with stupidity. "Like Like Like the string of the string of Zens make quickly. "I wish you'd persuade him not to?"

was the for it, certainly, here at a chance meeting in makes the for it, certainly, here at a chance meeting in makes the for it, certainly, here at a chance meeting in makes the for the standing in the aisle with their for the present the shelves to let people page that the ference did it make where you talked about this the did the place have to do with it? You result into the for "talking something over," and if you going the for "talking something over," and if you
going the for "talking something over," and if you
going the for "talking something over," and if you
going the for "talking something over," and if you
going the for "talking something over," and if you
going the for "talking something over," and if you
going the for "talking something over," and if you
going the for "talking something over," and if you
going the for "talking something over," and if you
going the for "talking something over," and if you
going the for "talking something over," and if you
going the for "talking something over," and if you
going the for "talking something over," and if you
going the for "talking something over," and if you
going the for "talking something over," and if you
going the for "talking something over," and if you
going the for "talking something over," and if you
going the for "talking something over," and if you
going the for "talking something over," and if you
going the for "talking something over," and if you
going the for "talking something over," and if you
going the for "talking something over," and if you
going the for "talking something over," and if you
going the for "talking something over," and if you
going the for "talking something over," and if you go the for "talking something over," and if you
go the for "talking something over," and if you
go the for "talking something over," and if you
go the for "talking something over," and if you
go the for "talking something over," and if you go the for "talking something over," and if you go th

Libby and the second se smiled again. "I know him very well."

figures at once that it was not going to be any party she had spoken, put herself in the position who had no influence on her son appealing to said. Libby wanted him to work for Tony. Of educationship given him the idea, insisted on it, because it was concern for the future. If it had not been for never so willingly go into something that he had be the did not expect to like.

lon't think you ought to worry," Libby said. "fill said up right now, but he'll be all right; he'll find the fill said thought, reassuring her, explaint her. He'll find himself. I'll bet he will. He'll find himself. I'll bet he will. He'll find himself.

inks," she said. "Thanks, anyway."

Probably it was just as well. She didn't want is freshably it was just as well. She didn't want is just as well. She didn't want is just as well. She didn't want is just any possibility of fighting this girl, it would simething more subtle than sarcasm. Still, it is was always weakening and being agreeable was always weakening and being agreeable when she intended not to be. There was some intended, she suspected—that kept her from following the same or indignation or unpleasant in the backed. She could be nasty only up to a probable backed down.

wilk as Jim," Libby said, "but I don't shi in love since he was sixteen, and he has any of the other in love since he was sixteen, and he has any eventually he was going to marry the girled had found this amusing and rather toucher that, almost frivolous, about everything, yet he serious and steadfast.

states tried to believe that he would get over Libby to the one clse, but she knew now that it was not got the case and spontaneously as it always had before had her soft little claws in him, and she did not go. She intended to clinch things as quickly as property to it that he took the job that would bring immediately unquestionable security.

thirdly she planned to marry him before he went is so that she would be sure of getting him, but had to bet that she did not expect to follow him as many camps. She would stay home in her parents before in Haddon Hills (a house, according to a long to make the could not have afforded any more if the could free and clear) and wait for him, and the late would not miss out on any fun in the meaning a cigarette from the package wedged up in the lighter warmed up. As soon as she had the better. How venomous I am, she thought ed over her cub.

ine supposed, Libby was all right. She only to girls did when they had an attractive both du't want to lose him. The point was that a by just as Tony's office was wrong for the warm and gay and bright, someone who rather dull little del vol

Then all at once—or it had seemed all at one. It was good, of course. It was healthy. She wouldn't have been—he not only no longer taked her state it when she gave it. Now, man, it is it was good, of course. It was healthy. She wouldn't have been to it when she gave it. Now, man, it was good, of course. It was healthy. She wouldn't have red it any other way. Only now, just now in this matter of the wished she could have the influence on him that the price had.

parked the car in the driveway and went inside it was prining to get hot, and the house had that cave-like cooliness turne in late spring, after the furnace was turned of and the outdoor heat had permeated the walls. She telt not had been a sight of Ann, fast asleep on the sofa, did not irrive her might have some other time, but gave her a feeling of the the was just a little girl, playing at love with a game to the sound for the sound go away to college and meet other sound game to dress properly. She would grow up and forger at chief it was foolish to worry over Ann, with her cheek maked is shildish pinkness and roundness against the sound to the little little freckles sprinkled across her nose.

that back on the grass and wiped off here dirty and her face was shiny with governor heavy for slacks, even such heavy for slacks, even such heavy for order, and the state of the previous She always looked atter and tell him. The poor roses."

Cited him. I'm scared to death of him." Zelds in the and lit a cigarette. I ought to cut down, she the cited in a cigarette. I ought to cut down, she the cited in a cigarette. I ought to cut down, she the cited in a cigarette. I ought to cut down, she the cited in a cigarette. I do not consider the cited in a cigarette. I do not consider the cited in a cigarette cited in a cigarette. I do not cited in a cigarette cited in a cigarette cited in a ci not scared of him," Marcia said. "You just don't to have him out. I know you."

"I guest you do. I guess maybe you know me better than if he see husband. Sex is too much of a barrier." She is too much of a barrier. "I support that's low people can make such terribly wrong choices they fall in love."

"Tooy?"

Britis going to be an essay on the subject of Lex and Many Color brighed. "Why, no. No. As a matter of fact, for the bright of forgotten all about that. I was thinking of Jim and the wife of the wife of the proof of the bright with the wife girl, more involved than I realized."

I mention in the village just now."

is how? Wrong character, mentality, side of trad profession for Jim, that's all. She's a vapid little finishing and profession wants to be married and taken care of in her topic and what Jim wants to do can go hang."

white

Jim want to do?"

th. Tony is what he says, but I'm sure that's he not be done in himself that he doesn't expect to like our the engineer or an industrial designer not an ind be to be onite a summer."

Sixed out the back window, her face sudden a over to Joan's and spend the night, all the She's getting some of the kids together for a property of the side of es it's all right," Zelda said.

Tisce disappeared from the window, and Man you sound so grudging? Don't you like Joan have know I sounded grudging." Zelda thought at I did. I guess it's because I usually let her do to do, yet I can't help feeling that parents are relievely no. So I compromise by saying yes half her if she asked you whether she could have an attention of the parents are relievely you say yes half-heartedly?"

looked toward the window where Ann's sleepy, it. She wished suddenly that she had kissed had the couch, even if it had wakened her. Feeling had the warm, fresh, milky smell she had had some in to pick her up of course she wouldn't have. She smelled the course she wouldn't have she smelled to course she wouldn't have she was she was formoon like this, of perspiration.

Spection isn't likely to come up," Zelda said.
Solved amused. "I believe I've shocked yeu the? The idea must have occurred to you. She miding half her time with a grown boy. You's yourself. Anyhow, I know I was." She will also "And they're going to be separated in the last summer."

The gres carefully made-up, mascaraed the middle of the afternoon in the the ways I do remember the way we were the sand I think they're different, and I'm glad the ways I'm not, because they don't seem to the think during or the ambition that we had. Some for them because they seem so cautious and they weren't young at all, and sometimes I'm into want them to get something out of life and they want them to get something out of life and they wit seems to me they won't—and then other time by the know them at all, anything about them, any parents knew us, and that they're not what they it there's nothing I can do to help them."

know," Marcia said. "I think you make it the think if you just love them as much as possible they're born, and they know it and feel it, they in this all right."

Zelda said, and laughed. "For you, that's the m't it?"

the not reply. How could she expect Marcia and living had never felt responsible to anyone or for She had married two men, and left them will be at the married two men, and left them will be at the married two men, and left them will be at the married two men, and left them will be at the married two men, and left them will be at the married two married to cope. But it was not so easy for me the how to cope. But it was not so easy for me them and hope they'd turn out all right. It them and hope they'd turn out all right. It that suide them, not in the old forthright that subtly and carefully, so that they did the helped or guided. And Marcia thoughts.

drivin from Rebo was non wer but Marcia's. He had not drives he train trip. It was the other way around you're an awful fool to get mixed up with fulfill you haven't sense enough, maybe I ought to make it when he comes tomorrow, I ought to make it when he comes tomorrow, I ought to make it was this his headquarters for the rest of the summer can't stop me from being a fool, Zel. I'm too a factor of a while, whether we like it or not. He was the can't stop in the matter we like it or not. He was the picked another blade of grass and blew a blast her thumbs. "They'll dig pretty deep, and some he pleasant for any of us."

saw suddenly that she was upset. "What's the managed she asked gently. "Are they likely to dig up some his want to keep buried?"

Cauld be," Marcia said. Zelda was sure it could. There is periods in Marcia's life about which she knew nothing marcia she was sure they had not been empty. The same admitted, she had always been a fool. "Every a said she was soon keep buried," Marcia adds a said she will be a s inze. She said, "Nancy?" as if she did not know tant. But Marcia said nothing. She knew Zeldu colda asked after a minute, "has Nancy Dellet."

firough Lex that she got the job in Tony's of fut I can't imagine why she should interest the regiong to ask about everyone Lex every the elegarette from the stub of the one she was like thands were shaking. Why did pone so. It isn't your fault." Si for a while. It's too hot out here." id not look up. "All right," she said. the from the kitchen as Zelda entered the hour Em you a minute, Mrs. Halliday?" she said. Edinorrow." thing always went on, no matter what happened ve dinner tomorrow. is it. Rena?" iex," she said. "He's going to be here isn't he? Link like to get some peaches, I'd make a peach pie. to peach pie." Les. What was there about him that could install though he were the good, kind "massa" and old plantation, when she had been born in H iring and had never called a guest in the house. his surname before? And how did she know. to peach pie? hone the marketing for the week-end," she have to eat ice cream and like it." sit upstairs. The bedroom was cool, the venetic ainst the afternoon sun, and she took off her on her bed in her slio. not want to think about Nancy Dellett, al te all. If someone asked questions, a recrything would come out. Maybe not, since interested in, not Tony. If they asked her with Nancy, there would not be very mile because she did not remember. She had more at that time with what Late Dellet business had been over long and led it have to do with Lex's job in the State deputate could it have to do with anything any most turned on her side and stared through the dimensal at Tony's picture on her dresser. Unless it was had acever been over.

I be a fool, she told herself. Of course it's over, it was a picture smiled at her. It looked very little as the list hair had been thicker and his face had been a picture attractive later. He wore a moustache in the acatly-clipped, British kind of moustache that work had now much better than it had then.

the know why you keep that photograph out," Ton by a few weeks ago. "It belongs hidden in the land along with the other ancestors."

Like it," she had told him. "I like to remember when I met you. After all, I can see how you wore it, and nad expected that he would say look older. It was the only reason she knew should wear a moustache, unless he was at a beard with it.

in it is it."

If you don't like it, I'll shave it-off."

personal

the one cocktail last all through lunch in the initial state of the waiter. They had talked about the the appetizer and half the entree, and then, in the appetizer and half the entree, and then, in the asked him about his moustache. It was absurd in it would matter deeply whether or not she like the think my opinion could possibly be that imposite the could be could be that imposite the could be that imposite the could be could be that imposite the could be could be that imposite the could be could be the judge of that. Tell me if you like it."

bowned down into his Bronx, which was the cheapent its could get here, and tapped on the tablecloth with the noted that his nails were very clean. She always then a nails, ever since she had read in a novel the could never fall in love with a man who had district here's were not always clean, but when you worked as and they couldn't be.

all wear moustaches," Tony said. "My father, my beadfather, my four uncles. That's why, I guess: I have been it before."

you admire your father very much?"

it way. He has a lot of notions, though, and it need to the the saw of them could be wrong."

" she said, "haven't all fathers?"

ippose so." He twirled the glass around, still in wet his lips with the drink. "He can newer for not going in business with him—the jewel the feels it's sort of effeminate to write copy for the feel it's father's disapproval trouble, it was her mother's disapproval that the father only nominally the head of the lague.

THE RESERVE OF THE PARTY OF THE

changing a coulent for them had a fast new line every birth. She was always comparing every other mass with Lex.

init do much," she said.

resistant say, 'Farnham, Cropsey and Wall. Good morals anughed. It was a good imitation of her voice at the state and it surprised her. She would not have thought of pilmic. His eyes were twinkling too. He was not a season of his eyes were twinkling too. He was not a season of his eyes were twinkling too. He was not a season of his eyes were twinkling too. He was not a season of his eyes were twinkling too. He was not a season of his eyes were twinkling too. He was not a season of his eyes were twinkling too. He was not a season of his eyes were twinkling too. He was not a season of his eyes and have to know a season of his eyes to business school at night, and when I'm a state of the president of a big company, and later of the president of a big company, and later of the officers and matter more than ten thousand the season of the president of a big company, and later of the president of a big company, and later of the president of a big company, and later of the president of a big company, and later of the president of a big company, and later of the president of a big company, and later of the president of a big company, and later of the president of a big company.

or laugh at her, as Lex would have done, and the string her time in business school, because the married before it could do her any serious can do it, I'm sure. I think anyhody can be to have the string to have the string ide very tender toward him, and, although the bill much later, it was the beginning of het later. She had hovered so meekly and precipe of love with two men, first Morgan Riley had had so little influence or impact on their and her pride to have Tony shave off his motion disapproved.

Marcia about it that night, after they came to the Italian of the corner. They no longer cooked anything but the trained in the bathroom. Marcia was always the made $35 a week modeling fur coats in a Avenue. As she explained, "You can't put a mining $4.95 dress." But Zelda could wear almost anything the part of the $25 a week stretched.

tindio was not as cluttered as it had been a year lid not look much like a studio at all any more thanks stood in one corner with a half-finished painting that had been there. Zelda had asked Marcia once whether she every the stagain, and her sister had said, "No, but the effect. If you live in the Village it looks being the an artist."

mean you've been pretending right along? I didn't know it in the beginning, but I had have they were invited out for dinner, but at the Italian Gardens for seventy-five centering school, The Italian Gardens was not always school, but if you were known you could wrine, commonly known as Daget 1999.

humorous anecdote out of the india moustache, telling it to Marcia as thought disped. Actually she hoped to impress Marcia over men. She was not popular in New Yorkes been in Framington. She had dates now and the she had Lex, but the phone did not ring for as it did for Marcia. Her sister, she felt, was the had sorry for her, and so she played up the say and made Tony sound more attractive than bound him. Ir was possible that she convinced here began to seem more attractive to her from the

"It seems they've been friends for years."
It seems they've been friends for years."
Ind not find out why until long afterwards. She did not find out why until long afterwards. She did not find out why until long afterwards. She did not find any first before the first that she had decided not to wait for him and wait of Dellett.

ever know Lex to bring a man around?

work and were still in the clothes they had at let everything drop on the floor, her knitted in the above the splendid curves of her body, the teddies with her name embroidered out tookings and the blue shirred silk gain. They lay in a vari-colored pool at her perhaps until the next morning. In the ning going to the later.

k know yet." Lif you're here and he comes, entertain him tok

Zelda said, "sure."

whited until Marcia had gone out with Jimmy best own bath, and then she hurried feverishly in the get away unexpectedly early, as he did sometimes. Marcia had a late date. The bathtub always at of the gin they made in it when they gave a big put of scrubbing would get the aroma out of the porter if it were to transfer itself to Zelda's skin, which is could, Lex would not notice. He was always at with gin himself Zelda had never seen him dry with gin himself Zelda had never seen him dry wellephone rang as she was dressing. She answers trying to pull on a stocking with one hand, nerver her Lex would arrive any minute and she would its see him.

ic." a man's voice said, "is this Miss Zelda Liston siwn voice appeared to come back to her over she said, laughing. "Tony." E. Zelda." He said it in that quiet, serious wa substy you might not be busy tonight. I

Sistant she hesitated. Then she said, "I'm" make wait here all evening for Lex and inner with him before Marcia came, to borned.

indicated at herself with dissatisfaction in the land kooked at herself with dissatisfaction in the land gone out in a knee-length black satin dress that the land seed of the l down on the studio couch and looked at a movie the was a picture of Vilma Banky on the first in took like a John Held girl either. Of course and foreign women never did. There was a picture and he same page. He was handsome allentino on the same page. He was handsome who humming "The Sheik." The words that humming "The Sheik." The words that mind were not the words that had been written parents in parody. She wondered what her parents is knew she knew a parody like that. They the lameteen didn't know anything.

if persuaded them to let her stay on in New and a good job and was so happy. For any applicated Zelda's mind that she had never but the fact than the doubell rang, and she kind

Line is boy. He had enjoyed life, while had not been arraid to take. In the had not been arraid to take. In the had not been arraid to take. In the had not been arraid to take. It was a confused, cautious boys in the high. Could be possibly grow to manhood in the head. In three years he would probably.

biled her mind away from that. Ever since the some through when he was eighteen and she had that draft him any minute, she had determine the single of the she had to. Everything changed in any kind of danger. She was not going the dietally again, the and Tony had together. He had given it to the and written on the back, "To Delilah from A few months after that he had given her a the moustache, and written on it, "All my her leve. But you never gave anybody all your and some left over, waiting. It took only a sertain mood, a certain set of circumstance lady with it, ready for someone else.

had been no Morgan Riley and no Leahad behaved differently—if Tony had go hunness so that Nancy would not have last that shaved off his moustache...

prious foundation for a marriage, and yes better than most. You could make a lost anybody, she thought. It was Fethaps they'd be together still, and last lastead of Tony on the 5.23. It was lasted upon the same some sort of satisfactory marriage that would make up in excitement what she supposed that was what he and March is a temperament had been different, if she could be the same with him all the time, it might have be lasted to south the contractor, in the old-fashioned are training company and he was kind. Maybe this knocked on the door. She thought of not any to be saleep, but she couldn't do it, any monever let the telephone ring. It might always be showd.

is?" she inquired.

Ann."

miled to herself. When Ann telephoned, she This is Ann," as though Zelda might not to the her early years away at summer campair letters, "Love, Ann Halliday." It was at the establish and hold on to her identity best cidear," Zelda said. "I thought you had gone and the door. "I'm just going." She peered and then came in. "What's the matter? Had it's almost better."

little against the pillows and looked and gentle note of consideration, but And the being sercestic again. Ann old that he say being sercestic again. Ann old that he say the down." Zelde said, and patted the beat the beat serce was still an awkwardness about here intocreainty. When she was overwrought, settles. Now she perched on the edge of the beat sever been near it before and was afraid it may hareis says the F.B.I. is investigating Lex.

pays they're going to be asking us questions."

pose someone will be around. It's a matter of a pube applies for a job in the State department, if will be very exciting." She smiled. "I'm afraid in payestioned at all."

in the half light, Zelda could see Ann's face red.
I'm not auxious to be questioned," she said.
I'm old, wanting to play cops and robbers." She if guess I'll go."

te down, Ann. Don't be so touchy." Zekda character back."

who got heart attacks whenever they were the who got heart attacks whenever they were the shwarting her. But Ann was so difficult soo as and moody and unreasonable. If she happ tractly right, it was possible to laugh at her string her, but you could never be sure with exactly right. Evidently this was not one

My." Ann said stiffly. She did not sat so be go. "I was just curious about what he that's all. I thought I might leave that The a particular point of reading The Control you know that in Westchester you all be caught with The Daily Worker.

then. You know what I mean. I can't business like that. If he were a Communist suparthy with him, we wouldn't tell the truth, as a sympathy with him he wouldn't tell us the truth.

in's know anything."

couly to lead out if he's a Communist, of course into what kind of man he is, whether he contact her he could be blackmailed. But you might be tigator when he comes that he's probably just while us such things about Lex. Maybe you on the go away."

as she had said this last, Zelda knew it was rements that Ann would find objectionable. Zeldest many things her parents did and said objections would have thought of objecting. Every distributed the silly, old-fashioned word, and been with repetition, and she had used as much make this manner of speech or his ways: If the patch of it, but she had never suggested to be authority, she knew she might not get along with her.

however, Ann did not appear to notice reoccupied.

ose he'd ask any personal questions any h personal questions was

They parked in the driveway at night?

They parked in the driveway at night?

The so, but I'm afraid not. As I say, they want is skind of man Lex is, what his friends and family it is they it doubtless ask all soits of questions. I suppose in the parkets of the soil is the winter assing. Everyone has something in his life he winter assing.

known."

pagave her a quick look. "Have you?"

cobably, if I thought back. What about you?"

c?" Ann laughed. "I'm only seventeen."

"metimes that's old enough."

ou're always asking that," Zelda said. "Sometimes Line asking that be answer."

wish you wouldn't talk that way. I wish you wouldn't atic. I hate sarcasın."

da sighed "You'd better go along to Joan's. I wasn't her wit," She smiled as pleasantly as she could. "Goodbya, the fun."

with Ann had gone, she lay back on the pillow again, and have a headache now. Nancy Dellett was forgott moment, crowded out by Ann. If only she knew whatelon inside the child, she could help her. Ann could a ching and she would understand, for whatever it was ably done it herself when she was a girl, or come clowless thought about it. But Ann did not want to the like did, she couldn't, because she thought Zeldig the did, she couldn't, because she thought Zeldig that cropped up between them sometimes, and thing that cropped up between them sometimes, and the seemed able to help it. Antagonism, if you have the it. Once you would not only not have given to would never have admitted it, even to you mount toward your own child. But now everyour.

ame of the straight loved each other. This discouncements that still stood, though so many discounted since the twenties.

with Ann, never as deep. She must ask Tony some it is a certain moods she could get him to talk about anything the certain moods she could get him to talk about National talk abou

The took the train into New York with his father on Monding. Usually Tony got to the office at 9.45, but he could be allow an employee, especially his son, to arrive that late. The same the 8:16, which would get them in by 9:00.

trains. One or two greeted him and asked him what he was does to early, and he had to explain about Jim. He sounded to early, as if there were something remarkable about had a pain ald enough to work in the office with you, but he probable to be a situation like this

They did not go into the same car as any of the men who kees they. Tony took the seat near the window, though out they ago he automatically would have let Jim have a let look out, and opened the paper he had bought at the folded it up again.

he said, "I'm glad we have air-conditioning in day for the beach," june said, and then knew it the beach. What was up and year the bad it added the planed at the front page of a company turned to the inside. He had often told lipt hook at a whole column at once and get the sense of lound it hard to believe anyone could do that. "Figure 1 was telling you about," he said, folding a page in his a said, folding it to Jim. "See what you think of it."

and the piece itself failed to jog his memory. There was a single of a man in his library. He wore a polo outfit and the single went with a game like polo. He had one foot on a chair and the hand a glass of what the copy said was a certain kind of the hand a glass of sportsmen. His other arms was in a share withing in the copy explained why.

It's very striking," Jim said cautiously.

residently that was all right, because his father said easierly, it? Everybody who sees it is going to wonder about the criss aling and read the ad to see if he can get the story. It words, the man with the sling will be famous, and are whisky he drinks."

madidn't say anything. He wanted to ask whether this say at a say the say afraid he might have been to say a conversation which he could not remember.

then they got to Mt. Vernon, Tony handed him the first the paper while he read the financial news. Jim was not hewspapers. At college he and his roommate subscribe. Herald Tribune because the fellow who handled the subscribe was a good guy and needed the money, and Jim was a good guy and needed the money, and Jim golumns, but he preferred hearing the news on the golumns, but he preferred hearing the news on the golumns, but he preferred hearing the news on the golumns and sometimes, he thought, with the same that way and better, he thought, with the same that way and better, he thought, with the same that way and better, he thought a lot of dull writing.

then they had started the dralit business and directives although the last fee has seen a pieces carefully, but now a case which was a second to the last of the is the bosorrow, the most he'd lose was a year, it is the wouldn't wait the year out in any case, it was get it over with. One thing, if he did that he was exceptain why he wasn't making Phi Bete like Day is the exceptain why he wasn't making Phi Bete like Day is the exceptain why he wasn't making Phi Bete. So what? You all falling yourself rushing in to an office every day when were forty-seven years old. He wanted to retire long before and travel and ski and swim and take it easy.

de train pulled into the tunnel and his father took out a fair figurettes and offered him one. He took it and held it is few ininutes before they reached the station and then when Tony lit his. All around them men were lighting eigered pulsing their jackets back on, pulling briefcases down from tracks over their heads. Most of them looked tired before they started, as if they were thinking that it was only the beginning of Monday and it would be five days before the weeker. The women seemed fresher, more as if they liked the jobs the weeker going to, but it might have been only the make-up.

Here we are," Jim's father said. He put his hand on the shoulder for a numite. 'Let's go." He wasn't much on mentality as a rule, but sometimes, when you least expected his could be sort of foolish about something. Now he soliton as this was a Big Moment, instead of just the first day."

sustatour job.

Inched been to the office many times, of course, ever since the little kid and his father had brought him down to the same little kid and his father had brought him down to the little off. Once he had dropped in on a Monday morning a little weekend in New York, to borrow enough money to be same school. He hadn't told anyone he was going to the little of he hadn't gone home or even called, but his father the little of him would have a crazy thing, but Jim would have ion of the whole sixteenth floor of the ming was glass and natural wood panelling and this matic chairs that curved around your spine and you On the wall of the waiting-room was a picture of ed fruit. It was an original Cezanne and it had cost was it $3,500? Anyhow, it had cost a lot of money, supposed to be worth it because if you could spend all rainting, it showed everybody you must be a pretty itising agency.

father put him to work the first day cutting out ads from newspapers and periodicals and pasting fferent books. He was supposed to read them over as he and "get the feel of them." It was not a bad job. Once found the ad, he could think of anything he wanted to has cutting and pasting. He could think of Libby, of the water a swim, and the way her skin felt, cool and shippery smelling of salt and sun and a little, still, of the powder

For the perfume, or whatever it was whe he ought to marry her right away. There were fa Mege who were married and hving in Hanover with They'd have a year that way, anyhow, before he ad. Maybe that was what he ought to do. The only to the was only twenty years old; he wouldn't be twenty November, and that was pretty young to get married been on his own, in a way, for three years at college, the same as being married. When you were married whe head of the whole works, you managed everythin responsible for everything, and there wasn't anybit Let you know if you weren't handling it right of a the if you got jammed up. You had to be pretty all that before you were twenty-one. He was that smast. Maybe after a stretch in the army, he for it.

the was probably the was probably the last than he was, and not so much pretty as smarr and trim with a narrow, keen, high-cheekbonist bust be Jim Halliday," she said.

Leat's right."

weld out her hand. It was narrow like her face and the it, it felt strong and cool.

Welsome," she said. "I'm Hallie Breed. I'm supposed to be supported around here, but I do a little of everything, as an be any help to you, let me know."

"Thanks," he said. "I will,"

She came and looked over his shoulder at what he was do that "she said. "Busywork. They had me doing it too was looked." She patted his cheek. "Well, don't let it get how a some day you'll be a great big advertising executive. It might have been an offensive remark, but a said when she said it and winked at him, so it wasn't. A shoot the said, "Take me out to lunch some time," and then a gone.

The thought about her for a while, and he decided he has anyone so attractive in a long time. It would be fulfill her out to lunch. He would tell Libby about it, and explain the advertising business even mairied men took worth to lunch all the time, because that was where a good problem has been as conducted, over the lunch table or table. And he would amuse Libby with snatches of the booking conversation with Hallie Breed. She always to the land things like that.

ther called him on the inter-office phone at twelve the how he was doing.

I can't eat with you today, Jim." he said. "I have the Go over to the Whitney and tell Max, the cany son and he'll see you get a table. Order wind to get hold of Hallie Breed, but she had alread to welled over to Park Avenue, staying on the shade area. Men were walking along carrying their jackets, their inch, and most of them looked sore about something. It is they were thinking that it had no right to get this hot, and how was it going to be in August if it was this wondered if anybody thought that made it look like a particular of the were at the beach with Libby.

Whitney was dim and very cool and very crowded their said if Mr. Halliday would sit at the bar for just a first said if Mr. Halliday would sit at the bar stretched across the length of the restaurant, and every stool was taken. First for some time before he could get a martini, listening to the length of the business, and everything seemed to be a length of the more drinks they had the bigger the deals for wondered how some of them were going to go back to their forms and work after all those drinks.

He had just got his martini when Max told him he was reast Mr. Halliday now, and wouldn't Mr. Halliday like to be a cocktail to the table. Mr. Halliday didn't particularly with cocktail at all. He thought a martini was a terrible tagent with, but he knew it was what you were supposed to order the seally knew anything about cocktails. Very dry, you will be seally knew anything about cocktails. Very dry, you will carrying his very dry martini so it would not spill, an item at a small table at the side.

that everybody was watching him, probably we he was doing here, a young guy like him. He was come, except that his father would probably he he hadn't. This was where they had expect the

The country is one as he was to the hamburger more than the deviced the cream and ate it slowly, letting it trickle down the always are ice cream that way, always had any kid. Libby would like it here, he thought, but would her treally fit in, any more than he did. She'd been to the places like Twenty-one and the Stork, but this was difficultive next table a man in a very light tan, almost yellow all worsted suit was saying, 'The trouble is you have the meet too cute in the first scene. It's all right to have them a cite; but not as danin cute as all that." Jim didn't know we have talking about, and Libby wouldn't have known either

But he was sure Halle Breed would have. She had the look about her as the other women in here. She was more tractive than any of them, and younger, but she had the purch, keen, know-what-it's-all-about look. He would he chieved lunching here if she were with him

He got back to the office before two, and went into the religious be was told the meeting was to be. No one was there is the didn't know what chair he was supposed to take at the log poliched table, and he felt foolish in the big room all by himself the went out again several girls were typing outside. They were using electrometriers, and he stood and watched the speed and ease with one of them. Two men had it upside down and looking at its insides, while the stenographer watched.

Mint I take a look at it?" Jim asked.

you have all one or them smiled. "Go abead you have any more about it than we do." The other one, of the other one, or that was cut, for a college guy—said, "That wouldn't take any

The make of the latter will chuldn't be very complicated. "What's the main he asked the girl. I just doesn't go any more. It was all right all morning just won't go."

explored the machine with careful fingers, whistling the his teeth. He was disappointed when, in a few miles found the loose wire. He had thought that maybe he is to take the whole thing apart.

hat's it," he said, stepping back, wiping his hands or Merchief.

Well, what do you know?" the younger man said.

advertising business."

didn't like him much. The older one was all right one was a wise guy. It turned out later that he was one there is alesmen in the business, but Jim still thought he was a layout man and Jim had an inche he was a pansy, but he was all right anyhow.

expole were going into the meeting room now, and in a min

Hello, Jim," Tony said. "Have a good lunch?"

de did not wait for an answer, but hurried in and to at the head of the table, the only chair with arms of a batch of papers out in front of him. Jim stood broody else was scated, and then he took the chair the table were four other men besides his father and hallie Breed. She smiled at him and nodded and about being there, more as if he had a right to bright, now, let's get going on this," his father arritable, upfamiliar voice. "You know who are got until tomorrow at four o'clock to dream."

and the same and the same

Asturally," Tony said. "That's the whole points visual," another man said, in a complaining voice. "How are we going to put it across on the so definitely visual? Now on TV, it would be rapped on the table with his pencil. "All right, "TV's out. Culverton doesn't like TV. Let's not yet the said of the sai could say," Hallie Breed suggested, "'Who is the total

"We could," Tony said, "but I don't think it would sell Culture me whisky."

Hallie shruggen and smiled faintly. "It was just an idea idea." Keep them coming, even if you think they're no give produced some of our best stuff that way, haven't be idea, had once been with a triend who was in delirium, and the eerie sense of watching someone become an altoget who was now. Nothing about his father was familiar; "was tooked different. There were lines in his face that Jim haven seen before, and his eyes had almost the same conditions feverish look as the delirious friend.

the remembered sceing a movie about a meeting like this care agency. The head of that agency had been a some of the table of the same like something. Jim could see that some of the this three said made his father feel like spitting, but he certain the table to that. He used words instead, but though, the thought the thought everybody there would hate him, to mind much. In fact, they were soon population, that lim lost track of what was going on. It all seemed a little silly to him. Everyhody all e this over a lousy commercial. He didn't see would buy Culverton whisky just because some guit recited some fool jingle like, "Culverton's the drift Mry it too and you'll agree." He didn't get the man ting business at all. What was the big mystery? The the his polo pony and broke his arm, or somebody with with a mallet and broke it that way, or maybe he got in ght. Who cared? Even if people started talking about with the sling, the way his father seemed to think to hald, lim was willing to bet most of their wouldn't remember the had anything to do with Culverton whisky. It was to at game where you tried to match advertising slogans with he products. The slogans were familiar enough, but he was er sure which belonged with what, and very few other gen either.

a limitally

But everybody here was all wrapped up in it. You'd have a wight they were the UN, trying to work out something the fill persuade the Russians to lay off. He looked at Flatter at the was making notes on a pad, writing in little butter as she could, her fingers white where they gripped theil, her eyes glistening.

Look," she said. "Look. Why don't we give him a man the Earl of Culverton, or something, famous British sports and a shing. You know. Every anything is swank if it's British. And you have to have swank, or people just think of a quick one at the some Sut where's your commercial?" the man with the portyonce .sked. "I don't see how you're going the party out of any of that."

the that he was first the table for the condition of the table for the condition of the table for the condition of the tamous Culverton to the table of table of there any such family as Culverton in the comparish youngish man inquired. "I mean, if there is, and we shall start giving them titles, when maybe lots of people is from Astoria from way back-"

There isn't any Culverton," Tony said. "Let's get on wind in stopped listening. He looked at the model of a school of the mantel over the artificial fireplace at the side of the model of the model of the model of the model over the artificial fireplace at the side of the model over the artificial out. It was black marble with an opening for the chare were no logs in it; there was nothing in it at all mothing on the mantel except the ship model, which didn't belong in the room either, or anywhere else except in so belong in the room either, or anywhere else except in so belong in the room either, or anywhere else except in so belong in the room either, or anywhere else except in so belong in the room either, or anywhere else except in so belong in the room either, or anywhere else except in so belong in the room either, or anywhere else except in so belong in the room either, or anywhere else except in so belong in the room either, or anywhere else except in so belong in the room either, or anywhere else except in so belong in the room either, or anywhere else except in so belong in the room either, or anywhere else except in so belong in the room either, or anywhere else except in so belong in the room either, or anywhere else except in so belong in the room either, or anywhere else except in so belong in the room either, or anywhere else except in so belong in the room either, or anywhere else except in so belong in the room either, or anywhere else except in so belong in the room either was nothing in it at all the sould be belong in the room either was nothing in it at all the sould be belong in the room either was nothing in it at all the sould be belong in the room either was nothing in it at all the sould be belong in it at all the sould belong in it at all the sould be belong in it at all the sould be belong in it at all the sould belong in it at all the sould be belong in it at all the sould belong in it a

He had always liked boats. He and another fellow had like Beetle one summer, and they had sailed all over the beetle one summer, and they had sailed all over the beat it. But what he'd really like was something when the that could really take you places. He'd have a boat some day, and he and Labby would go down to Floriday winter and up to Nantucket in the summer. He winter and up to Nantucket in the summer. He will be beat he water, so the chances were she liked boats. It was funny that he didn't know that he water, so the chances were she liked boats.

the carefully, how to give a slow, those such general terms that no one could be sure by any notion what was going on.

wall," he said. "Well, I'm pretty new at this, so I don't despute the first of them."

The said around at all of them."

men all smiled back at him, and Hallie gave him a madely wink, but his father didn't look at him.

wall, I guess that's it." he said, and his voice sounded a way it did at home. "Thanks, everybody."

the train going home that night, he scarcely spoke at a pought an evening paper and gave Jim the second half, and the had finished the first half, he put his head back against the had finished to sleep. Once his head perked forward and opened his eyes angrily, as it someone had deliberately asset him, but in a minute he was asleep again. Just put than the heat up, looking a little refreshed, and began speak as though he were continuing a conversation.

you'd rather be doing something else, Jim," he said you ought to tell me right now. I won't be hurt, you want to do, and if it's the me, that's perfectly all right."

What brought this on?"

ony glanced at him quickly and then looked away. The interested in what went on in that meeting room weren't even listening."

Sure I was, dad. The Earl of Culverton, famous sports in father spoke as though he had not heard. "Main her isonght. She doesn't think you're fitted for the a mininess, and maybe you aren't. There's nothing the My father wanted me to go into the jewelry the exciting."

ad picked the right word. His father smiled and Mays is. After it's over you may be worn out, and you what it's all about and whether it's really of an with a at all, but while it's going on, it's the most image min in the world. And when you finally get what you're enacty the right word or gummick or whatever, I don't it there's anything like it." He gave a little laugh, "Half the I mank it's a hell of a phony business for a man to devel the to, and I wish I were doing something more worth w but the other half I know I wouldn't really want to do anyth else. This than, of molding public taste-you've got to be artist and a psychologist and a meamerist and I don't know else: If you do a good job, it gives you a sense of power. stopped and looked at Jim. "I didn't mean to make a special That's okay." Jim said. He was embarrasse l. He had it heard his father talk tike that. He had never heard high really overboard about anything at all before. It was the second unfamiliar side of him Jim had seen that day, first at the mi and now this. At the meeting he had admired his far toughness, the way he had sparked the group and got the working at hot pitch, but this was something else. How a any body get sentimental about that stuff? A sense of po Lide't think he had ever heard such borscht, and he w is tacher hadn't said it.

Bir held Libby about it that night. Not the words-he coth brought himself to to repeat them-but the sense of it outshould have seen that meeting," he told her. were, knocking themselves out over that man with thess as if he were-I don't know-God or some the bad to figure how to rut him over to the congress sort of inspired them. He was really hot, I then of cours that cool, and he thought how different it was leady coolness of the office or the Whitney. Other croups dotted the beach, and a few people were in though it was not really warm enough now that the bene down. One group had a fire and was cooking hot singing. I could stay here the rest of my life, Jim though here just like this.

that's why he's successful," Libby answered him. "Been that way about it."

laybe."

He lay down on his stomach, his chin propped on the land of the lay down on his stomach, his chin propped on the land looked at Libby, and wondered if he would even the looking at her. She had on a sleeveless sweater at and sandals on her bare feet. Whatever she work had exactly the right thing for her, and you wished the wear anything else, but then the next time you saw her have on something altogether different, and you'd feet the way about that.

er's get marned," he said.

smiled. "Right this minute?" She had the pretriest he'd ever seen. Like seed pearls, and he couldn't help was corny.

he said, "why not?"

fell." She began enumerating on her fingers. "Find had a blood test. Second, we can't get a license we do. Third, you aren't twenty-one so you'd had your parent's consent and your mother wouldn't have that's first."

te do you mean, my mother wouldn't give in now?

desir't like your desir't have any reason. She hardly seer in the you're always nice to her and everything.

the positively, "if she didn't like you, she'd religion't know her. She'd have a little talk with me if you have any reason. She hardly see if you have a little talk with me if

Not with this, she wouldn't. I'm sure she wouldn't. She

You sound as if it's you who don't like her."

Labor clasped her arms around her knees and looked do

Moin?" he hooted. "Go on!"

Med. she doe. "he's so clever and I don't know how to the My mother is -well, you know, just a mother, because of the same of

The grinned at her and pulled her down beside him. The state of the thought he knew what she meant about the part of the fat side and she did the state of the fat side and she did the state of the fat side and she did the state of the she to Libby thing about her hair. When she tolked to Libby the friends, she changed her voice as if they were single the or foreigners who had to be spoken to carefully the she had never seen them before her instead of answering. Her lips tasted salty, a be reason he thought of Hallie Breed and wondered will taste like. If you kissed a woman like Hallie, have to let her go so soon; she wouldn't expect you thought, that was a crazy thing to be thinking at kissing Libby.

Rollie always kidding about getting married." Libby a

all right," he said, without knowie : exactly:

at the how with payer of the last firm at the last get anywhere for years, if at all. At least I'm at the last firm at the la

The said nothing for a minute. He looked at her. The said nothing for a minute. He looked at her. The said was on her face, and he saw that her mouth was some later to that kind of appealing way, and there was some her teeth. Goddam, he loved her. It was funny, the said made you feel like that. Not when she was all dressed tooking beautiful, but when she had her mouth open.

Mare was lipstick on her teeth.

You've got to like what you're doing," she said. "You've any good at anything if you don't like it."

What are you talking about now?"

"You told me how your father feels. That's why he's mister a secess. But you wouldn't, not thinking it's all a lot of access. You'd hate it and be unhappy, and you wouldn't be and be unhappy."

That's a fine thing to tell me."

Well, don't you think it's true?"

She sounded like his mother, and that was funny, because he should like his mother. "No, I don't think it's true," he should like his mother's business, and he'll see to it I get some place he matter what happens. What do you think he's going to do should he an office boy because maybe I'm not crazy about the like I never know I'm not, anyhow."

Don't yell," she said. "Please don't yell, Jim; I gue ther would never let you starve, but I'll bet he would not a really important job, either, if he doesn't think and enough. Not if the business means so much to his all right," he said irritably, "then it won't be so danted."

gant."

But don't you see?" She sat up and moved he him at your contract the pieces of the special state of the special stat de at the blanket. He had been feeling so good, so peaces and good.

he do you want me to do, work in a garage?" he ask same question.

Jaon't know, maybe," she said. "You were happy doing the summer, weren't you? You're crazy about cars. Maybe you'd start like that and some day you'd design a new car, a something, and you'd be famous and rich." She inched acres the blanket to him and put her mouth close to his car. "The jumpy H.," she said, and giggled. "That's what you could your car. The Jimmy H."

Me got to his feet. "Let's get out of here. Let's go home."
Don't be mad, Jim. I don't see why you should be mad."

When he pulled into his own driveway, it was ten-thirty, I

"I'm not mad. I just want to go home"

heard voices on the torrace and he went to see who it was a war to be early to go to bed, and he didn't want to be alone as how. If his aunt and Lex were there, they'd be good for book contertainment. He really got a kick out of these two.

At the not Marcia and Lex, though. It was low-next to the feet was low marcia and Lex, though. It was low-next to be over. At least it had been a feet between them seemed to be over. At least it had been a feet or mother's side. Lex hid not appeared to notice, or the low mother's side. Lex hid notice, that she was always trying the lim. Probably she had decided that it wasn't so had he may around after all. He was good company, and keady to help out by driving down in the store

Blacks extrapolate.

work in the study, and Aunt Marcia went to with Ann and Bill. She's never been to one and always been dying to go."

It bet they appreciated having a chaperone," Jim sand Let grinned. "No one in this world ever thought of a chaperone."

What's the difference anyway," Zelda said, "at a move Drive-ins aren't just movies," Jim said, trying to get of her. "They're passion pits."

elda wrinkled her nose and said, "Don't be disgusting laughed.

ien shrugged. "I didn't make it up. Everybody calls at the sat down. "How's the job coming?" he asked the lide of the sat down. I have to wait until the F.B.I. decide when the enough to work for the government. Until the probability of the p Someone from the F.B.I. is coming around tomorrow the company of the see me," Zelda said. "We've been wondering when the tomorrow because he knew Lex wouldn't be here?"

Aunt Marria are going to the races."

Sure he knows. They know everything." Lex said:

intrigue beyond anything E. Phillips Oppenhein and up. If you want to forget your troubles towns themselves invisible."

ho's K. Phillips Oppenheim?" Looked at Zelda. "Is he illiterate, or lust with we're all listening in on thought-microphones to and patted her cheek. "No, mom, they haven't be office, so far as I know."

mother ignored him. She spoke to Lex. "He and the have built up the fiction that I'm a drivelling idiot; "Whenever their male ego is tottering a little, the ways fall back on that."

No one," Lex said, "ever took you for an idiot, Zel."

She looked at him and smiled, "No?"

concernes you were reminded that they had known that for years, since Jim's mother was younger than Jim's now, long before Lex had married Marcia. But if you trie had of them as they might have been then, you couldn't had all been different then, anyhow. Their war had back of them instead of ahead of them, and as far as he we there was never going to be another one. If they was make plans, they could make them, and be pretty sure in through.

Fourse quiet, Jim," his mother said. "Is anything wrong the shook his head. She was always asking him if any wrong. Sometimes he thought the was hoping there withing he would have to tell her about so she could contain the would have liked him to tell her everything, the when he was a little boy, and she knew he wouldn't hept trying.

probably tired," Lex said. "Work always make mustn't ask him." Zelda said. "You mustalled" personal matter."

while in Recoming everything to yourself, ish a so be interested in what happened your first day is office? Do you think you'll lose caste, or something us?"

The I did tell you. I pasted ads in a scrapbook and the late Whitney's and I sat in on a meeting about a tell intercial for Culverton's whisky. What more do you in the late?"

knew, of course. He knew she would love it if he told what he had been thinking while he pasted the ads, and he had felt while he was at the meeting. She d have love he about the martin at Whitney's and why he ordered have about how he had made his father think he got a kick on the man with the sling and about Hallie Breed. She'd have it all up if he could have told her, but you couldn't told mother any of that on couldn't let anybody know you that well, when it can to it. If he hadn't told Libby so much, it would have been too. She'd have thought his father's office was the dream life, and there wouldn't have been any argument. It as people knew what you were really thinking and fertion tried to make you think and feel something else.

serve him alone, Zel," Lex said. "Let's all have a dried stood up. "I'll get them. I just want a coke myself.

wanted a scotch highball. Jim's mother said she'd higher.

She took his hand and pulled him down to hear higher it your own way," she said, and kissed higher four ean atomic secret, if you want to, and higher him here ask you another question."

issed her too. 'Sure you will, mom," he rr in

din win."

the Mrs. Gorman, even though he had sometimes were. There might be certain advantages in a mother which with her. He couldn't imagine kidding Mrs. Gorman, with her. He couldn't imagine kidding Mrs. Gorman, with her protested when his mother asked him quest apposed he'd have missed it if she didn't. At college took asked him anything, or if they did, it was only an open wings so they could tell about themselves.

the started to make the drinks, and then all at once he terrible need to talk to Labby, to make up with her. Not they had quarreied exactly, but he had left her without her goodnight. He could remember how he had felt when was small and his mother hadn't kissed him when she said in hight because she was displeased with him. Sometimes he known he was not in the wrong, and he had wanted despend not to give in, but he always had. He had always called he had and told her he was sorry, because otherwise he can always had.

There was really nothing for him to be sorry about they. She meant well, but she didn't know what they talking about. Sure he had liked working in the garage didn't have to tell him that and his mother didn't have to us have he was good with his hands and felt.

His mother thought he should have been an engineer, but better. He couldn't have done all that stuff. He was good at math or any of that. All he was good at was put to congether, making them go. Nat Tillson, in the good has had worked last summer, had told him he was a because than some of the men he'd had for years, and but where did it get him? It was all right for years.

Men may gainge methanic ever could make a light Mechanic, everybody would think there was son by wouldn't like it either, whatever she said. Oh sign and in a couple of years he that only the beginning and in a couple of years he that be be a big shot, a designer of cars, or something, the bad suggested, that would be fine. But he knew it would be that he was just a guy who was good with

But he was Tony Halliday's son, that would have be But he was Tony Halliday's son, the son of a big adjusted man, a Phi Bete, and he was damn lucky that his farther business of his own where he could push Jim ahead as he wanted to. All he had to do was act alert and interpretate the right things and ask the right questions, and he way. He'd got through plenty of courses in college like the professor hadn't been his father.

could have said all this to Labby she'd have a bood, but he couldn't. When he tried to talk about it or his mother it just sounded as if he didn't care abouting but making a quick buck. He'd have been willing and to work his way up to something somewhere electrows he had what it took. Otherwise he'd be a dealing his brains out and getting nothing for it. Hell's lived once, and two or three years came off in the said with.

of coke with him. It was late, and her father ship to the state it, but he couldn't help that. He had to the waste was always blowing his top about something to the waste this, it would be something else.

tarted to dial the number, but then he heard clam's

the Bill and Aunt Marcia?"

the home. She's out on the terrace."

cating you? You look like hell."

door of her room close so he could telephone, but in the was down again. "Listen, I've got to talk to you her hair was blown all over and she hadn't bothered. It. Her lipstick had worn off and her dress was all creased bly from being squeezed in between Bill and Marcia much seat. She wasn't a bad-looking kid when she firm up, but you'd never have known it now.

Il keep, won't it?" he said. "I want to make a phone call!

can't call anybody much later, can 1? It's almost twelve can't call anybody much later, can 1? It's almost twelve can't. Bur her face looked funny, as if she were going to cry said, "Oh, all right, if it's so important. Let's have it." The voice got tight. "Not here. I don't want anybody to hear can't on out and sit in the car."

was curious now. What kind of a jam was she in? I deren, as he followed her outside. A jam with Bill? I k think so. Not that way, anyhow. He didn't think he have the nerve. He wouldn't have had when he will have the nerve. He wouldn't have had when he will have the nerve. He wouldn't have had when he will have the nerve. He wouldn't talk to him about that; she'd have been scared of not known in hyway. Ann wouldn't talk to him about that; she'd have the knew. Now that he thought of it, what would have to him about? They didn't fight much any more, he have exactly on intimate terms. She was a kid just of him labout. He was fond of her, but their interestimate at all.

way to the garage and got into the front of ic said. I heven't got a stirred and out her head down. "There's ber the F.B.I. tomorrow to ask mother questions.

know that. What of it?"

"I'm scared of what he might ask her. I thought if I see him first and tell him not to say- But I don't think the good idea either, because he may not even—"

"Whoa!" Jim said. "You're not making sense, kid. Star What could anybody ask mom that you have to be scared about Mrs. Dellett. He asked somebody else about her and I he's going to ask mother too."

"Who the heck is-? Oh, you mean that woman who a work for dad. What's she got to do with anything? It's want to know about, not-" know, and I don't understand what she's got to do with that's not the point." She stopped, and then went on. a low voice. "She was up here once when mother and and a party. You were at camp. Joan's brother walked me ho Forn their house after supper, and when he left, I went are back so I wouldn't have to meet all the company." stopped again, and Jim wanted to tell her for pre's sake tell on with it, but he kept quiet. "Dad and Mrs. Dellett were the they didn't see me. They were standing sort of under the the Mens. necking."

Film took a deep breath. "They probably had a few delight mess's mean anything. People do those things sometimes by ve had a few drinks."

She didn't answer that. "I sort of forgot about it. 1 1 thought of it in a long time. But if that man starts asking nis-I don't know-mother might find out." She los "I thought you could help me figure some way

Why didn't you tell me before? When it happe

See new morn would find our volody knows about it."

work her head a little. "I don't know," she said the spiritual was just that one time, just the kissing. I won't remember what but I know ther 'darling.' "She paused. "If it was the whole de if mother finds out, she'll divorce him."

"son of a bitch," Jum said in a low voice. "The son of Main tried to keep the kids a little quieter in the camp bus, in wasn't any use. The Senior Councilor, Wilma Donscouss said. Let 'em yell. They're full of heans in the morning, the little hastards. You can't keep 'em quiet."

and sery—handsome was the word. Ann thought, because you and sery—handsome was the word. Ann thought, because you conside you couldn't call her pretty, not with those strong feature and the way she wore her hair, cut very short and not curled of wayed at all, and yet she was marvelous-looking in her own ways the was a beautiful even tan, this early in the summer, and had piercingly blue eyes.

She and Ann had charge of this group of eight and nine-year older. There were two other councilors who worked with the group at the camp, but they drove their own cars there instead of taking the bus. Ann didn't see how they could have gotter in here anyhow. It said on the outside of the bus that it had capacity of forty-four passengers, but there were fifty-seven in today and sometimes there were more. When it was hot, you could startedly breathe, and some of the kids always got a little

Ann asked Wilma. "In

Sababo Day Camp

which like that, Ann thought, he should never the hand kids, but he was around them all the time. In the caught physical ed at the junior high school. He didn a mind being called the Rat, though. Maybe he didn but it.

I don't see how he can get away with some of the the

It's starchy, so it fills them up, and when mama asked had for lunch they don't remember. Kids don't, as less y're filled up. On visiting days we'll have chickers bocolate sauce on the ice-cream, and the mamas will think we eat every day. Or pretend to themselves to think The bus lurched over a bump in the road, and there everal minutes of confusion as the children who were stand against each other and some of them screamed as been killed and others giggled insapely. Ann tried to hat she could, but nobody paid much attention to her. wift, she thought, watching Wilma restore order with a words and some detr handwork among the tallen ran Come on, everybody, let's sing!" Wilma shouted. Cheers for Rapaho.' You old campers make it loud and cle new ones can learn the words. All ready?" She held and and and then sliced it downward as she gave them the the opening har, and when they were singing deafer and almost tunelessly she moved back to Ann. "That" hem for a while. 'Dear old Rapaho, best camp in the bii l'

Ann grinned. "Someone told me this is your fourth ye Sure. Group heads like me get paid more than at any cheriday camps around here. The Rat's a shrewd operation the best Senior Councilors he can, so when manual whole going to be in charge of her little angel."

Donscourt, science teacher at the swanky British

Asid besides, it a open air days a week to come of the others, and it stays open until the instead of the third week, so for only a little mote a can get rid of her brat much longer, and that make the damn camp in the whole county of Westchester. I lima said all this very fast, speaking out of the side of the in a low voice so the kids wouldn't hear, though a them was listening anyhow. Ann laughed. "I don't get the said. "Hardly anything."

The doesn't have to pay you. You're glad to get the expense in such a fine camp, because everybody knows once you worked at Rapaho you can get a job at any camp."

The bus pulled into the camp grounds. It was a beautiful of the bus pulled into the camp grounds. It was a beautiful of the westchester hills. The price swings and sand boxes for the smaller children, a fine rould be transformed from a volley hall court to a base formound to an archery range, and an outdoor swimming the hot lunches were served in a long, low, jerry-built hou like "The Lodge," which also had rooms for rainy day plays always stiflingly hot in The Lodge. On fair days, the like down on the low roof, and other days the windows had closed or it would rain in. If anyone complained about it also to get back to the simple life, you know. It does to get back to the simple life now and then."

red came out to the road now to meet the busses as they seed and say good morning to all the children and council was short, chunky, middle-aged, with a mane of the and-salt hair and skin burned almost black by the ware a white tee shirt, khaki shorts and blue sneakers, where a manner of big, white teeth. "This is going to at Rapaho. Have fun."

morning, Chies," the children said. They filed the day's activities." But there were only three trees, and grounds. If a child wanted to be a bum sport and go the blazing sun during the course of a game, he could be a firm of them.

As soon as everyone was on the field, Mr. Ratman disappeared intervals during the day he would be seen standing of mall rise of ground, from which he could survey the wind party. Sometimes he was accompanied by Mrs. Ratman, it is mother, a thin, earnest-looking woman who taught fitted in the winter. She was the only person in the camp, the for the cook, who did not wear shorts. Her cotton dresses they looked as if they needed ironing.

conetimes they would just stand there watching silently for the silently f

What's the point of that, anyhow?" Ann asked Wilman

Milma shrugged, "I don't know. Maybe he's got a conscience of all, and that salves it."

they were sitting in one of the three spots of shade in their string suits, waiting for the girls in their group to get read swimming. The boys were playing baseball under the superson of Tod Henderson, a letter man who had graduated from school with Ann with a straight C average and wood blarship to a big midwestern college. He settled arguing the game by saying, "All right, now, shut up, you guys, ball."

fully, or swung bats where he might see them or in the grant the grass in the hot sun and stared dismally at the Every once in a while one of them would be a stared dismally at the stared dismaller dismaller

of the state of th

the game—it's too much trouble to show the life insist on his lerting them in, it'll only be the because he'll make them miserable, and encount is ids to make them miserable. He thinks they might a bloroformed, anyway, because what use to humanity be if he's no good at baseball by the time he's eight.

Ann lay back on the grass. It felt prickly against her all years small portion of which was covered by her two-pieces pathing suit. She was hot, even in the shade, but she would a large minded being even hotter now, because the more undiscribble she was the better it would feel in a few minutes, where got into the pool. All she could really think of was host would be in the meter, it y at first against her hot body, and the mothing, delicious. Everything else seemed remote, her first night with Bill; the F.B.L. man who was coming back at tonight and wanted to speak to her this time; even Wilma, sittle head flattering. She must have been twenty-seven or -eight, her talked to Ann as though they were the same age.

wish they'd hurry," Ann said, barely breathing it.

Here come the little darlings now."

Ann sat up and watched the small girls running toward the from The Lodge, squeaking and giggling. They were all and shapes, some so skinny that they looked like chickens, which ribs and breast bones showing through the skin, some rough their stomachs straining to burst through their was backing-suits.

in the square, blond pigtailed one came and planted her in the of Ann. "I'm going to ask her," she said over her in the planted being bein the little girl said to the child behind her.

Ann. I told her. They go to the hospital, don't get the bullet holes fixed up so they can do it again. For a minute Ann thought she was going to laugh, and to hew that she did not feel like laughing at all; it was the did her inight cry to think of anyone's being that ignoration innocent. She reached out and took the little girl's in hand and drew her a bit closer.

The men don't really get hit by bullets at all," she said so the guns don't have any bullets in them. They just make the said so the said ď.

the child stared at her. "Are you sure?" tan nodded. "Yep. Ask your mother." Okay, I will."

all the other girls followed. "Take it easy, now," With all the other girls followed. "Take it easy, now," With all "Nobody gets even so much as a toe wet until Ann and the there. You did good," she said to Ann. "She won't have the mother, assuming she could find her to ask her and you know her mother?"

Tim just talking generally. Maybe that one's mother hiding from her, but half of them are."

Why do they have children, then?"

Tilma shrugged. "I used to ask my mother that all the time has pool lay ahead of them, the blue water lapping grants the sides. Ann broke away from Wilma and plunger has a few strokes and then wriggled over to her back had letting the coolness sink into her bones. For a mother later that Bill was lifeguard at the Fairoaks Beach Club when he had a job here at Rapaho, and it was not important her being and and and which were shot full of holes on television where shot full of holes on television where to the hospital every morning for repair. A diled back to her stomach and swam to the shallow cool, where the children were lined up with Wilma a like else who must have been the new swimming could be a statch the Rat had hired for the summer had been drafte that was the job Bill could have had, only he hadn't want

Espent enough time at those camps when I was a little kee

That we could be together."

we could not. I'd have to be at the pool all day, teaching in the following for the could not it have to dog paddle. I want a good job in the could not be seen as the pool all day, teaching it is to be seen as the pool all day, teaching it is to be seen as the pool all day, teaching it is to be seen as the pool all day, teaching it is to be seen as the pool all day, teaching it is to be seen as the pool all day, teaching it is to be seen as the pool all day, teaching it is to be seen as the pool all day, teaching it is to be seen as the pool all day, teaching it is to be seen as the pool all day, teaching it is to be seen as the pool all day, teaching it is to be seen as the pool all day, teaching it is to be seen as the pool all day, teaching it is to be seen as the pool all day, teaching it is to be seen as the pool all day, teaching it is to be seen as the pool all day, the pool all day is to be seen as the pool all day is the pool all day is to be seen as the pool all day is the pool all day is the pool all day in the pool all day is the pool all day is the pool all day in the pool all day is the pool all

All right, then, if you feel that way Go to Fairoaks and of for our manly build to all those snooty girls, if that's when want. Maybe I won't be here when you come around for though."

"Yeah? Maybe I won't come around."

is had been a stupid light, different from any they had he felice, almost as if they had wanted to quarrel and were trying to work it up. Maybe because it had been a hot night.

The new swimming coach was holding a little girl around in shelde in the water, while she flapped her arms and legs. Strate others splashed near Wilma, and a few of the better swimmer came paddling out toward Ann and turned back with her his is Gerhardt Weber," Wilma said. "My assistant, Assistant," s an Austrian from Austria," one of the little girls a another one shricked, "He is not! He's a refugee."

Gerhardt," Ann said.

He smiled. "I would like you to call me Gerry."

and only a faint accent, more a preciseness of speech in any accent at all of the benefit of the second of the second

The half mile. He had a swimmer's powerful to leave the half with the otherwise he did not look strong and his alid.

You must have come from Austria a long time ago,

Ains said. "The way you speak English."

"No, only three months." He walked along slowly with bild he was teaching to swim, speaking to her softly. "Ann. "My village was in the American zone. For all the is I hear the GI's speak and I speak to them, and that is her English."

Wilma called to her sharply. "Ann, I need you I can't handle these kids alone, you know."

"I'm sorry." Ann swam over to her through the shallow water."
What do you want me to do?"

Take some of them off my hands, that's all, instead of horage binund with the first man you see."

Ann got red with anger. "What do you mean? I was to being polite. I don't think I said a dozen words to him. I was to be need to talk as if—"

Porget it," Wilma broke in. Then she smiled and put her and highly on Ann's arm. "I just want you to be careful."

effetcuve girl like you."

Ann was still angry, yet at the same time flattered. This was countried any of Wilma's business, unless Ann neglected her with the kids. Anyhow she hadn't said much more to Gerham courtesy required. He didn't look or act ninch like a fair was for sure. Still she was rather pleased that Wilma a fair think she was so attractive that any fellow would be a dained one had ever thought that before, even her mother, and take care of myself," she said, but wishout being a miterested in him, I assure you. He's much to old!

and to

de you mean?"

depend in back of a little girl who was splashing a splant her, aiming the water with demoniac precision is amounts that opened to protest. Wilma picked her up by the point of the bathing suit and held her in the air as easily as if the been a frog, though she must have weighed seventy pound hat's enough," she said. "Where shall I put you? Out the bool where you can't bother anybody? Or is it safe to let you thick in?"

The child gasped and squirmed. "Put me back!" she screamed

"Livon't do it any more!"

Witma released her, letting her fall against the water with smitck and then righting her before her head could go under Then she hoisted herself up to the side of the pool and sat there watching Ann playing with the children.

Come out and rest a minute," she called. "You can keep eve on them from here."

Ann got up beside her. Further out, where it was deeper, Garhardt worked patiently with the swimmers. "Not so fast with."

the arms. Easy. Smooth. Ah, sol"

"There's an earnest young man," Wilma said. "He'll make swimmers out of them all by the end of the summer, and the Rai will get the credit. My dear, it's the most a onderful case. Every single solutary child learns how to wim." She drumply her heels in slow rhythm against the side of the pool. "So you'r going steady. That's a horrid phrase. It used to mean the cool going with the cop on the corner. What's he like?"

the didn't know what to say. She felt on the defensive, though have thought you were beyond that sort of thing,"

Ann wondered, or some other with the asked, not knowing how else to put it.

where her terry cloth jacket lay on the grass, a writch in the pocket, and then blew the whistle the sin a cord around her neck. "All out!" she shouted. "John out!" She put her hand briefly against the back of the "You're quite a girl, Ann. Don't get bogged down thousand."

Ann felt warm with pleasure. She was not sure how was so much about her, but that was how Wilma was low a great deal about everything. From the first day of cause week, she had talked to Ann about all sorts of things in the of sharp, cynical way she had that got right to the heart of sharp, cynical way she had that got right to the heart buttever it was, and apparently she had liked Ann's comment to the could not remember that she had ever said anything tracularly brilliant. Still, some people could understand the were really like even if you couldn't always put things exact way you felt them.

"I'll try not to," she said to Wilma, and smiled.

Lainch was outside that day because it was the cook's day and a group had its own charcoal fire, and the councilors reserved to dogs and marshmallows for the children, and passed outside and ice cream cups and containers of milk. When the hidren were served, the councilors ate their own lunch, principle of by cries for help from someone whose tomato had squinged over the front of him, whose hot dog had been filched in paper plate when his back was turned, or whose ice and a dithered into the dirt.

The gods!" Wilma said, leaning against a tree and draw the from a paper cup. "How do we stand this every we have beat brat that wails my name, I swear I'm going to he the head with a burnt wurst"

he swimming instructor had been helping with their hand under the tree now between Ann and Wilms were his swimming trunks and the first flustration.

wik you don't mean that," he said to Wilma, small looked at him briefly, gulped her coffee, and crushed to her hand. "I feel sorry for them," she said, tossing the the fire. "Sorry as hell, that's all."

That why?" he asked, still smiling. "Is not childhood spiest time of life?"

"Hal" Wilma said.

The and Ann herded the children into the Lodge, where reconstruction are stood ready for the afternoon rest period. It is the last to stay and see that everyone rested. "The Constructions of the Constructions of the Lodge and wandered outside, almost as hot as she is the before her swim, wondering whether she had the energy get into her suit again for another dip.

She decided against it. Gerhardt was still under the tree, sitting now and smoking a pipe. She went over and joined his had when he saw her his face lit up and he sprang to his feet. Was lonely, she thought. She could imagine nothing lonely then being in a strange country, where even the way people was unfamiliar, no matter how well you might know the language.

Miss Halliday," he said.

She grinned at him. "Sit down, Gerry. Nobedy's that period. And nobedy calls me Miss Halliday, either."

Thank you," he said gravely. "Thank you for telling to help." He sat down again and she sprawled beside him on the back against the tree. "I will appreciate if you will appreciate it.

Many," she said. "Okay."

mice, she thought. She felt comfortable with the presence of a way he seemed younger and there is things, American things, that she knew and he didn't have you here with your parents?" she asked him.

the shook his head. "I have a sister who is married and his this town. It is with her I stay. In the winter I hope I have a position as a swimming instructor in a boy's school to Ratman knows of. I am a very good swimmer," he said, in a conceited way at all, Ann thought, just as he'd state in and I have patience for teaching."

Yes, I saw you with the kids," she said. "I thought you write."

nderful."

You did?" he said eagerly. "I am glad, because I try way?"

Also, I like children—kids—very much."

So do I. I may go into teaching myself."

Such a thing had never occurred to her until that momen had thought only vaguely of what she might do after collection the back of her mind had been the idea that it was not ver important, really, because there probably would be only a small the between graduation and marriage. She would have to fill at lapse, of course, and it was a good idea to know how to do comething in case you had to work for a while after you were married, but you weren't going to make it's career of anything you had a talent, or something you were burning to do different, but Ann wasn't in that class and she didn't know sone clse who was. They all just wanted to get married. as all right to take a job and to keep it at first if you had be cause sometimes you wouldn't be able to get married at all a s you helped out like that, or anyhow you wouldn't be able a the way you wanted to live. But you planned to give it start having kids as soon as you could. eaching wouldn't be a bad thing to do along with seeching wouldn't be a bad thing to do along with the seed, because the hours were so good, but this was not a Ann most forcibly now that she really thought the ids who hadn't done their lessons. But She was a science teacher, but she was certainly attractive, vital person. And she wasn't even in was the thing. You could be a teacher in your late twee even if you weren't married you didn't have to be a drie Emaid. You could be like Wilma. 🖫 believe you would make a fine teacher," Gerhardt said, 🥰 misten would listen to you because they would love your that in just the short while I have watched." Ann laughed. "They don't listen to me much. It's Wilma will can really manage them. She's wonderful with them." She is older. She understands better what makes them—ticl "Yes. that's right. Tick." "Yes. But you will learn, and do even better, I think." Better than Wilma?" Ann shook her head and said age he's wonderful. If I could do half as well, I'd think I was Por." Gerhardt did not answer. He puffed on his pipe and glance at Ann and then away again. There was a vience which or a narily would have embarrassed her. She would have felt she ha to fall it, or appear stupid and a bore. But she did not feel that way now. It seemed to her that Gerhardt was thinking, at that he wanted the silence, and she found it comfortable. *Do you live near?" he asked her finally. "About six miles from here." With your family?"

"Yes, my parents and my brother, Jim. He's twenty."

Lou are still in school?"

First finished high school. In the Fall, I'm going to Radelli College. That's in Cambridge, Massachusetts." She looked historiad smiled. "I play tennis and rule horseback and a love of her and I like to watch almost any sport, especially footh the actor is Marlon Brando and my favorite act and a least but the last saidt was looking at her with a little from sing for a minute, and she felt sort of peculiar. y understand that kind of kidding. Maybe he didn et she was talking about.

am sorry," he said then. "I ask too many questions withat I am interested to know about you, since I this to be friends."

The felt ashamed, as though she had been baiting a child that been the mildest kind of teasing.

Lou weren't asking too many questions," she said. trying to be funny." She paused and then added, "I gi nericans are always trying to be funny," he frown faded. "You say that as if you apologize. Do belogize for trying to be lunny. It is a good thing. I think in world that is not funny at all. There would be no trouble www.body laughed."

That's putting it backwards, isn't it? If there were no tra think not. The laughter comes from inside. When it is in lere, nothing from outside will put it there. When it is, noth a take it altogether away."

🛍 everybody would laugh."

Neither of them heard the blowing of the whistle that bunced the end of rest hour. Ann saw Wilma coming att grass from the Lodge, but it did not really register. She h per talked like this with anyone before. It made her ange, sort of stirred up, as though there were a lot of the wanted to say but she didn't know exactly what they then Wilma spoke, she jumped.

Didn't you hear the whistle?" Wilma asked. "You've b to do, you know. Save the socializing for after hours Gerhandt had leaped to his feet as she began to speak doing," he said. "I talk so much and so loud we do at whistle." He smiled. "That is always my de them and was off, running do powerful legs pumping, moving fast have is head thrown back too far and his arms stiff. The beigner, Ann thought, and then knew that was sill in," Wilma said. "European charm. Pfuil" got to her feet. "Don't you like him?"

Only I wouldn't trust him as far as I could throw him Ann a long look. "Be careful, kid, huh? You're just the got young thing to appeal to his type."

goodness," Ann said, "you don't have to tell me the ever nime you see me talking to him. You'd think he was going terribble me up or something." She thrust her hands into the polices of her shorts and looked at Wilma dehantly, "And I don't see why you should bawl me out because I didn't come ritioing the minur the whistle blew. I didn't hear it, but even if Laid, this is a camp, not a factory."

turned and strode back toward the Lodge, and she didn't Wilma didn't like it. One minute Wilma talked to het when were the same age, and the next she was the Big Boxes and Ann was just a kid who didn't know what she was doing and didn't behave. Ann liked to know where she stood with Wilma's voice was right behind her, but Ann didn't turn. Shi had a feeling that Wilma was going to apologize and for sorti reason she didn't want her to. She wanted her to be angry, and sub manted to stay angry herself.

began to run, but Wilma caught her arm, and she felt he hand, strong and cool, on the hack of her neck. "Don't be such since fool," Wilma said softly. "I wasn't bawling you out The as just to get rid of Charm Boy. I've become awfully you, and I don't want to see you hurt. But I won't but

d down, her anger and confusion all falling away and and the control of the control o

Bolific Gefry, and it would be a good idea to keep ad the was really interested in him anyhow.

But when she thought of Bill, all of a sudden it was like ing of someone she had known a long time ago and conremember very well.

Everybody was home for dinner except Jim. Ann tried to the table in shorts, but they wouldn't let her. You'd thought you could be comfortable in your own home. She except but it wasn't any use. They didn't see why she couldn't will be as comfortable in a sleeveless dress. There was no experience that a dress came down around your legs. At breaking and lunch it might be all right, but this was dinner, they are and Lex was there and she wasn't a child any more. So she on the dress and pulled it up above her knees under the table." "Where's Jim?" her father asked.

"I don't know," her mother said. "He just told me he was saying in town for dinner. I'm not allowed to ask him my suestions. Didn't he tell you where he was going?"

"No. He left word with my secretary that he wouldn't fee

He started to say something else, and then he didn't. It was because Marcia and Lex were there, Ann thought. Up to a paint, everything was discussed in front of them, but there was a later somewhere. Ann could never tell exactly where. She will also her mother told' Marcia everything anyhow, when they also alone, and maybe her father did the same with Lex, though the were different that way. But somehow they both seemed to have been were different that way. But somehow they both seemed to have been were thing that was going on, sooner or later, and Any have that it very much. After all, Lex wasn't in the family at the later Aunt Marcia hadn't been around for a few years and a later and a later

Side were just the four of them. You could say a sign of family and act any way you pleased, and could have hawled out, you didn't mind so much if there were the aren't worried about Jim?" Lex said. "Because he's been still out for dinner?" He laughed. "When a fellow his are home for dinner every night, that's the time to worry." He laughed is the time to worry. The laughed is the time to worry. The laughed is the time to worry. The laughed it had been home the ham then, and waited while Anni father there is an out to pass, so there was going on. You couldn't live there and not know. Just had to been home the whole week until very late, long after Anni was in bed, and he hadn't been with Libby, because Libby had called up once and come over carce, both times with pretty flimsters.

"What gives with you, brother? You're making like the In" visible Man. Don't you love us any more?"

But she hadn't been able to get any kind of rise out of hims at all. He had just said, "Forget it, will you?"

she would have forgotten it. She had never thought very much about Jim before, not in that way, as somebody to be concerned over. He was her brother and he was okay, but he was in a different world.

This was different though. She had a part in this, because it all dated from the night she had told him about their father and tire. Dellett, and she thought that must have something to do tien it. He had been acting funny to their father ever since they do polite, as if they hardly knew each other. She wondered it him hated him because of what she had told him. Maybe she to think about it. She didn't and she hadn't ever the beginning. She had just felt sick to her stomach and the beginning to think about it. She didn't want to think about

d how the would have seled if she

She might have stayed away from the house wible, but she didn't think she'd have stayed away whe liked, the way lim was staying away from L "How was camp today?" her mother asked her, che sice, safe topic while Rena was in the room.

Okay," she said. "Hot, but okay." That didn't sees tiough to say, so she added, "We have a new swimming." ilor, Gerhardt Weber. He's Austrian. He's only been her months."

"What's he like?" Murcia asked. She always wanted to the what men were like.

Oh, he's not too bad. I thought he was about twenty-cig first, but he's only twenty-four. He looks older, but he acts young in some ways, almost innocent"

She stopped. She had not meant to say that much, only fater into the conversation, the way her mother was all idling her to do. If they kidded her about Gerry now, tries make something of it, she'd have only herself to blame. But hody said anything except Marcia. Nobody else seemed dinening.

"Don't let that fool you," Marcia said. "There are no inner European men." ·

She and Wilma ought to get together, Ann thought.

They began talking about Jim again, as soon as Rena had. but nobody really came out and said anything. They Valked around it, without admitting that there was actually thing peculiar in the way Jim was behaving. .

"I'll bet he has another girl," Lex said. "No boy his stick to one girl this long. When we were kids we didn't ca but these days it's something to be ashamed of if you Ann stopped listening. They weren't going to get because they didn't know what was at the bottom of the knew, or thought she did, and still she co where Avelowing and Page 194

intervous about the F.B.I. man. Nobody had the squestioned at all, and they didn't see what she contain would be any help. "I suppose they want to get ever appression of me, even a kid's," Lex had said, and laught et through this, you can all assume that I must be a predictable fellow."

know that now," Marcia had said, in the same sarcast to the same sarcast when her mother used it. "Whi had so looking for, I think, is someone safely unremarkable."?

Was certainly true that there was nothing much Ann cost that anyone about Lex, but she didn't think they were going to ask her about L. She was sure she would be questioned about Mrs. Dellett, the way Mrs. Thayer had been. What Mrs. Dellett, the way Mrs. Thayer had been. What Mrs. Dellett had to do with Lex's getting a job in the government, of they suspected Ann might know something about her, she had no idea. All she knew was that she had this secret and the state had a way of finding out secrets.

The man came promptly at eight o'clock, and he and Ann were the man came promptly at eight o'clock, and he and Ann were the man came promptly at eight o'clock, and he and Ann were the man came promptly at eight o'clock, and he and Ann were the man came promptly at eight o'clock, and he and Ann were the man came promptly at eight o'clock, and he and Ann were the man came promptly at eight o'clock, and he and Ann were the man came promptly at eight o'clock, and he and Ann were the man came promptly at eight o'clock, and he and Ann were the man came promptly at eight o'clock, and he and Ann were the man came promptly at eight o'clock, and he and Ann were the man came promptly at eight o'clock, and he and Ann were the man came promptly at eight o'clock, and he and Ann were the man came promptly at eight o'clock, and he and Ann were the man came promptly at eight o'clock, and he and Ann were the man came promptly at eight o'clock, and he and an are the man came promptly at eight o'clock, and he and came at the papers her father had been work and a came at the papers her father had been work and a came at the papers her father had been work and a came at the papers her father had been work and a came at the came at t

That 'man with the sling' ad has certainly caught on," he say than said, "Yes," though she didn't know very much about it is matches she'd heard at the table. She didn't pay much attention when they talked business.

the F.B.I. man took a pack of cigarettes out of his pocket and of the one. She wondered whether he was testing her in the way, and whether it would be bester to take it or not the way, and decided it was better not. When he put the packet his pocket without taking one himself, she was sure also the right choice.

Mr. Whitton's niece, he said, not as if it were

Thi not his niece any more," she said. "He and my

That's right, too. I forgot. What happened there, any for frowned, as if he thought it was too bad. "They buth the nice folks."

Yes," Ann said. "They just couldn't get along, I guest."
He nodded. Then after a minute he said, "Still, here they wing in the same house."

Well, Aunt Marcia was coming for the summer anyhove well, you know, he's waiting to hear about the job and hot in the city now. He and my father have always be fiends, even before they niet my mother and Aunt Marcia natural he'd stay here."

It was all going to be about Lex after all, and she need are worried. She was beginning to enjoy it now. Mr. and that she wouldn't know what as trying to get at, but of course she did know. She wasn't tope herself. You didn't get a 93% average in school by the cope.

Yes, I guess it is," Mr. Nye said. "A souple of people see think, though, that he's here because of your aunt, that till likes her."

Well, they're perfectly friendly and all that. I mean they because they couldn't get along, but they are they can be each other or anything. That doesn't mean they're get together again."

She was pleased with herself. She thought she had do be well. For a minute she hadn't been able to see the reace it made to the government what Lex and Auntibut then she got the idea. If Lex didn't know his better than to get divorced and then a few years.

id Jack

der of fact, the way they used to fight, she way they used to fight, she way they used to fight, she way they used to fight one of them could think of going back to it ided. "They made a lot of noise, didn't they? It's the embarrassing for you, the summer they stayed for you were worned when they came again this year." you were worned when they came again this year."

clooked out the window, and the sun glinted on his glasse did they fight about anyhow?"

die said, "I don't remember," and it was true. She dide the she had never known. She had heard the sangry voices and wondered who else could hear them; at the she had tried not to listen. If you didn't listen to thing himk about them, sometimes you could feel as if they had a defened.

Did they fight about money?" Mr. Nye asked her.

Treally don't remember "

Nye looked at her. "Well, was it about women? May particular woman?"

This was it, Ann thought. This was what he had been leading to all the time. Mrs. Dellett. Some way she had something the with Lex too, and Mr. Nye wanted to find out about he didn't care about Annt Marcia and Lex or any of that.

No." Ann said. "No, there was never anything about a Nye smiled again. "I thought you didn't remember."

Preserve fond of your uncle, aren't you?"

sid you, he isn't my uncle any more. He's okay, though cold you say that most people like him?"

Apparently he was going to let it drop. He was you think open like him as innich as women a

Ann went out into the hall and called her mother. These times the first out into the hall and called her mother. These times the state of the sound into the hall and called her mother. These times the sound her community whether she'd rather I spoke to her somewhere downstrains went out into the hall and called her mother. These times the state of the study can, when she tiptoed out to where she could hear. She know what Mr. Nye was going to ask her mother.

Mrs. Halliday," she heard him say, "would you consider I hitton a ladies' man?"

the didn't hear the answer, because her father's footstall the didn't hear the answer, because her father's footstall the didn't hear the answer, because her father's footstall the didn't hear the answer, because her father's footstall the didn't hear the answer, because her father's footstall the didn't hear the answer, because her father's footstall the didn't hear the answer, because her father's footstall the didn't hear the answer, because her father's footstall the didn't hear the answer, because her father's footstall the didn't hear the answer, because her father's footstall the didn't hear the answer, because her father's footstall the didn't hear the d ad pretend to be just coming out of her room.

"Hello, Baby," he said. When he was in a good mood, he called mother "Babe," and her "Baby." She hadn't thought he'd in a good mood now, on account of Jim. "Are they in there asked, nodding toward the closed door of the study. "I wanted work."

Should I tell them? They could go in my room."

Never mind. I don't have to do it tight now. How about wind me taking a walk? Marcia and Lex have gone off actions.

"Okay," she said.

He looked surprised, as if he hadn't really expected her the him. She didn't care much about walking as a rule, with Bill, but it seemed important to her to get him out the bar what was going out the bar what was going out the bar what was going out to some or later, she was sure, he was going to some to i

where adults were concerned. Even when when the into their world, as now, she didn't really under second going on. Maybe it was because she didn't was no sense trying to find out about things that to upset you when you knew them.

not coming tonight?" her father asked her, as they?

We had a fight."

the didn't inind telling him, because she knew he would the the way her mother did or try to be funny about it or a didn't did on the funny about it or a didn't didn't will be supplied to the funny about it or a didn't did on the funny about it or a didn't didn't be supplied to the funny about it or a didn't didn't be supplied to the funny about it or a didn't be supplied to the funny ab

it's not too late when the G-man's finished?" he asked her. "We not too late when the G-man's finished?" he asked her. "We not so bridge game because he was coming, and it's a charman million to go to an air-conditioned movie. I think we dited up for the next two weeks."

This was one of the things she couldn't see. They were always dated up and always complaining about it, saying they wishes they didn't have to go, that they could spend an evening house in a while. Ann couldn't see why they made the dates it this first place if they felt like that

The seen everything around," she said. "I'll just look at te

ALTER VENEZUE ALTER

the feminates what her father and Mrs. Delletts the other that night. All she remembered was the the kiss. That was the part she couldn't forget. It wasn't all.

What's the matter, Baby?" her father asked her. "Sold, are you?" But the idea of her being cold on a sold this wasn't worth considering, and he went on without the her answer. "I ought to do this more. Maybe I'd get potbelly."

ou don't have any pothelly. You're skinny."

laughed. "Your mother thinks I have."

the would, Ann thought. She'd tell him, too, making the of joke of it. When Ann was married, she was never going critical or sarcastic, and if her children wanted to we to the table or her husband wanted to have a pother tell them. She wouldn't make such a thing of it. He her was okay. Sometimes she was a lot of fun to be with the could even be sort of understanding, but Ann could the might have trouble keeping a man in love with the cially if there was a woman around who knew now to hand it. Ann had seen Mrs. Dellett only a few times, but it is to tell she was a smooth one.

But she didn't want to think about that. She didn't want has about it at all. "I've decided something, daddy," she has going to be a teacher."

is that right?" The Glendons, who lived behind them, in their car and he waved to them. "There goes the big in Westchester County, that Howard Glendon," he bught to be against the law to bore people. After all, it is truessing as having your watch stolen—more so, really you can replace a watch, but not the hours a bore on." Me looked down at her. "If you're going it's even more important. Sometimes people in the stolen watch is sometimes people in the stolen."

arroys. How long have you been and time," she said, and believed it was so. "But the group at camp—Wilma Donscourt, you've heard me det—was telling me a lot about it today." Ann transfer what Wilma had told her, but she couldn't example a science teacher at Limmett and she's really tops. I'd to meet her some time. Anyhow, now I'm sort of designately."

nodded, as if he thought it was all right. "Do you the will be good at it?"

well, I like kids and they seem to like me." She pause to think of something to add to this. "Gerry Weber, the pause of the series I told you about, says I have a way with them."

*Oh? What does Bill say? Does he like the idea?"

It surprised her that her tather would think Bill's opinion in particularly her the herself hadn't once considered what Bill might say; it has been red to her at all. This was something vague and far and Bill didn't seem to have any part in it. But as a matter this whole day had been something that Bill had no particular when she thought about that she felt peculiar, almost bough she were going to cry.

The won't care," she told her father.

Have you talked it over with mother?"

Not yet," she said. 'I wasn't sure until today."

of a few minutes they walked along in silence, and she look the houses they passed, all the familiar houses with the familiar that was always the first tree for its the spring but that didn't look like much now, in the Yan Huyt's honeysuckle that you could smell leng be to it and after you'd gone by, and the hedge of hydrod the big Pritchard place, the flowers not in blooks.

the area time; but she couldn't, one never could be seen something so often and knew it so well, we see it at all any more. It was the same with people fell me something. Baby," her father said suddenly, were you and me. Have you any idea what's the matter.

didn't know anything was the matter with him."

he could feel him looking at her, but she kept her face turnly, watching the smoke rise above the Litchfield's terminal were having a cook-out. You could smell the charge all right," her father said, and sighed. "All right. Let's under

Nye looked up from his notebook at Zelda. "Mrs. Hall would you consider Mr. Whitton a ladies' man?" he ask

What was behind that? she wondered. It struck her as a present of constitution, unlike anything he had asked her when he had asked her when he had asked her when he had been been there before. She had tried to prepare herself for any had suestion that other time, and then most of it had been present him. How long had she known Mr. Whitton? Did she consider him a man of good habits? Dependable? Did he get adorted with people? She had been greatly relieved and consider hield a fool for worrying. Mr. Nye was nor here, after all that her personal life. She had been as jittery as if it is the who were being screened.

he smiled and said, "Ladies' man' That dates you, Mr. his daing she was being absurd, making parlor quips with and investigator, but giving herself time to think how to the state of the s mink Lex has always been attractive to women," she is all, he's a handsome man."

Nye did not look up at her. He appeared to be doodling notebook.

was thinking more of the extent to which women are Firm sure I don't know, Mr. Nye. This is the first time the him in several years, as I've told you, and I haven't inquire him his amorous activities."

wasn't thinking only of the past few years. You said you wasn't thinking only of the past few years. You said you wasn't thinking only of the pages of his note book, and then looked up at her. "Twenty-five years."

"Yes, that's right." She similed, 'But I don't understand. How could Mr. Whitton's attitude toward women twenty-five years 'ago affect his qualifications for this job now?"

She was almost surprised that he did not say, "I'm asking the questions, Mrs. Halliday," the way the detectives did in the whole thing was a little unreal to her, even her own apporehensiveness.

Not at all, unless we find some connection with the present we just have to be careful," Mr. Nye said. He turned in his chairs and crossed his legs, and he looked rather as though he might hand into an explanation of the new extended coverage insurance policy. "A man whose private life is irregular may be a barrier sor is: You've read, I'm sure, about homosexuals in the State of the present who revealed secret information under threat of the present who revealed secret information under threat of the present who revealed secret information under threat of the present who revealed secret information under threat of the present who revealed secret information under threat of the present who is not the present that no one who is vulnerable to black galay? The passage of application

That do you want to know?" she asked him.

Manaded, as if he had always known she was a reason and a good citizen. "As far as you're aware, has the seriously interested in anyone else? Even when you

w him, before he married your sister?"

Was he concerned with someone else now, someone with Wash he concerned with someone else now, someone with Nancy Dellett—a woman in whom Lex had been interestantly-five years ago and still knew? Did he think—? But too preposterous. No one else could have known about for foolishness.

the smiled a little at Mr. Nye. "I don't think Lex was recreated in anyone in particular. I think he played the first way most young men did in those days. Probably conquestion easy for him. He was good-looking and a smooth talk of the girls were ready for him. You remember. Even the nicest backgrounds telt that conventions were still than the nicest backgrounds telt that conventions were still than the nicest backgrounds telt that conventions were still than the nicest backgrounds telt that conventions were still than the nicest backgrounds telt that conventions were still than the nicest backgrounds telt that conventions were still than the nicest backgrounds telt that conventions were still than the nicest backgrounds telt that conventions were still than the nicest backgrounds telt that conventions were still than the nicest backgrounds telt that conventions were still than the nicest backgrounds telt that conventions were still than the nicest backgrounds telt that conventions were still than the nicest backgrounds telt that conventions were still than the nicest backgrounds telt that conventions were still than the nicest backgrounds telt that conventions were still than the nicest backgrounds telt that conventions were still than the nicest backgrounds telt that conventions were still than the nicest backgrounds tell that conventions were still than the nicest backgrounds tell that conventions were still than the nicest backgrounds tell that conventions were still than the nicest backgrounds tell that conventions were still than the nicest backgrounds tell that conventions were still than the nicest backgrounds tell that the nicest backgrounds tell that the nicest backgrounds tell than the nicest backgrounds tell that the nicest backgrounds tell

But it did not seem long ago at all. Now that Lex was and Marcia—now that they were all together again—it was lough the time hadn't passed, as though everything were, the Studio and the speakeasies and the bathtub got could just stand in the right spot in eternity, you won all, how it was then, what was happening to them and y it was with them now, and probably the way it won interest. Like the pilot flying over the river, who from the river. Like the pilot flying over the river, who from the river cannot see—the rapids he has safely passed this

[130]

Mive a drink," Lex said. "What have you got left?" were no locks on any of the furniture in the State in hid their liquor in bottles marked Hair Tonic and W and Hydrogen Peroxide. Lex began opening them he before she could answer.

the hair tonic's some new Scotch," she said. "Tony got Time. A friend of his knows a steward on the lie de France brought over the bottle and two glasses and sat beside h the studio couch. "You've been seeing a lot of Tony, have "Any objectione?"

He looked up at her, raising his eyebrows, and then careful foured two drinks into the glasses. "Objections? What objections? ons could I have "

Oh, none. None," she said, and heard her voice rising a sould not stop it. "What's it to you? I'm just the girl you sne is see and make love to every chance you get, every time h ster's out like this. I'm just-" that up, Zel," he said quietly, thrusting the glass into he and drink your drink."

Also subsided at once and supped the whisky obediently. "I d what got into me," she murmured.

filon't either. One of the things I've always liked about you id, "is that you take life the way it is and don't make an ads or ask any questions or make a big romance out of what I can get, she thought, anti it's never enough; with the huddled against the cushions with her elections t around and around in her hands.

a lousy thing we've been doing, Lex. I'm March he anyhow—that no matter what happene at me, she'd always be the one you loved. But that all the time I've really been hoping you'd chan me, and I've been trying to get you to." Well." He looked at his drink a second and then draine one gulp. "What opened your eyes to all this?" is just about time I faced it honestly, that's all." And you've decided to end everything between us?" The looked at the strong, beautiful planes of his face and st fred. "I think it's the right thing to do. Lex. This is all of tien. If Marcia knew about it, she'd never forgive us over trust anyhody again. I don't know how I could have been She stopped and shook her head. "It was totten, Lex He got up and poured himself another drink and stood looks sen at her. "We're two healthy, normal, attractive people," H. "A man and a girl, thrown together constantly It woulds" natural if we didn't feel the way we do Are we supposed impress all our normal impulses because Marcia happens to be ir sister?" He took a galp of his second drink and then glass down and put his hands gently on her shoulders. ten't hurt Marcia. I feel the same about her as I always die only that I'm fond of you in another way." She moved back from his hands. He had said all this before ferent words, in the beginning and often since, and this was first time it had completely failed to reassure her. "What way?" she asked him. He grinned and reached for her again. "Want me to have No," she said, and stood up. "I told you, Lex. It's all did He chrugged. "Just as you say. But don't kid yourself." ou're a great one for kidding yourself." What do you mean by that?" That don't think you suddenly got strong and people who go around renouncing things because they're such strong characters? Bushwall they don't want what they're giving up the way people want what they're 'too weak' to give up."

1 132 1

The didn't know whether all this was because he had for or maybe only because he had now he was losing her, or whether a fury that sprang from the knowledge of his own we or maybe only because he had never expected her to be to be not not end it. But she knew he was right about her. The longing he had had for him was not so terrible any more that she willing to go on deceiving Marcia. Even if she could know not that he did love her and had all this time, it would be too later.

The sorry," she said, without knowing exactly what she mean the turned to say something to her, his mouth working before the sound came out. She had never seen him like this. Even him dies making had always had overtones of flippancy.

Sorry for what For me?" he began, but she did not fact what else he might have said. Marcia came in then, alone big orchid pinned on her shoulder her eyes large and shining bringing with her the scent of expensive perfume and the continuous statement of th city streets and, faintly, gin.

Hello, kids!" she said. She swayed just a little, but she is look comic or disgusting. She was too beautiful, too vibrall little thought. It was as though being tight were something out the safe that had nothing to do with her, affecting her out the roll of a ship might. "We saw the most marvelous play to said. "Street Scene." You ought to see it." She giggled in a said. "Street Scene, and we finished them all affect the during intermissions." She looked at Lex. "Gree to the said four almost as well as you can, sweetiepie."

on it plastered, he said, lightning to er wrist. "Listen to me. Listen. We're going a could see the color go out of her face under the mai boked at Zelda and then up at Lex and said nothing. So you understand me? Do you know what I'm saying Ther impatiently. "Or are you tighter than I thought?" understand you," she said, and there was no longer e of thickness in her speech.

Okay." He kissed her without putting his arms around. iust holding her by the wrist. "Okay. As soon as you a ake it."

He didn't say goodnight. He didn't look at Zelda. He isas ant out, letting the door slam behind him.

Marcia sat slowly down on the couch. "What happened, Zell e asked, almost in a whisper. "What brought that on? asay anything to him?"

About you? No He was telling me that nothing could en inge the way he feels about you, and then when you came mentioned Greg and all that-well, I guess he just made mind, that's all."

Leounded unconvincing and meaningless to Zelda, but Ma kided and a slow smile spread over her face. She settled his inst the cushions, flinging her arms apart.

Oh, Zel, I'd almost given up hope. I'd almost begun to t was true, what mother always told us."

She told us a lot of things."

Marcia's eyes crinkled. "I mean the one about men not re er a streetcar once they're in it." .

elda sat down. "Oh," she said.

What do you mean, 'oh.' " Marcia laughed. "You'm ked are you?"

Zelda said. "No, I guess I knew it all the

for how her het hat the

Zelda said. "Tomorrow?—Why, Tomorrow I"

Lift right," Marcia said, with mild surprise. "And in that. I still do, in a way. I mean, you have to live with the work of th

Well, you didn't tie it down," Zelda said. "You certain tie it down."

ther men I went around with—I don't know—it was like be with a telegraph pole. Lex is the only one who's alive in. And I begin to worry that he might stop coming around day. How can you tell? He might not feel the same who there girls as I do about other men. And then what stuck with the telegraph poles the rest of my life." She closer, eyes and sucked in her breath, the way she did when some wing delighted her. "Oh, Zel, I'm going to have him for keep."

Don't let anybody fool you. Zel. Marriage may not be will be with the won't," Zelda said. "I won't let anybody fool me."

Mr. Nye was flipping the pages of his notebook again. "The sail some mention—this may have been later; yes, I see it is looked up at her. "A Mrs. Walter Dellett seems to have the state of the prominently in Mr. Whitton's lite, from what I have sold. Do you know her?"

or a wild moment Zelda considered saying no. That work end of it. He would ask her nothing more. If she did not, she didn't know her.

he said, "Yes, I used to be acquainted with Mrs. Delleit "A state studied the notebook. "Yes, of tourse."

misband's office, didn't the? Of course Tour once lay awake night after night, thinking you? And now you are thinking about her aga dering. The fact is you know her very well, don't you haps not quite as well as you might.

m acquainted with Mrs. Dellett. There's very little You about her and Mr. Whitton, though," she said to

"I know he knew her, that's all."

When was that?"

Delieve it was just before he and my sister were married He asked in a matter of fact voice, "You mean he was see while he was engaged to your sister?"

No, not exactly." Zelda said. "That is, they weren't exact negaged, not formally at any rate. There had been some men of marriage, but then Marcia got sick. She had to have her pendix out and she developed complications. It was almost months before they could think again about getting man

And that was when Mr. Whitton was seeing Mrs. Delleti believe so. There's no reason to think they were more thank heads, though, Lex couldn't see Marcia for weeks. He'd hear The habit of coming to the Studio, where my sister and I live. very night, but no one was home during that time-I was with farcia, of course-and he probably felt lost. Nancy-Mrs. Delica was just someone to see, I imagine."

ida would go straight from work to the hospital every e wisit Marcia, and Tony would meet her there when she had we at 8:30 and take her out to dinner.

Marcia was in a room with three other women. When ented privacy you drew a curtain between the beds privacy it gave you was visual. Unless you whapen want to yell, and there's no sense yelling i people as Marcia was, and she'd have stuffed the pillor people as Marcia was, and she'd have stuffed the pillor mouth rather than let anyone hear her make a sound pillor. If it had been for herself, she thought she would have to her parents for money to help her have a more comful liness, but Marcia would not hear of it.

rhair, we ought to see it through. Counge, hell, she answers something Zelda said. "It's stubbornness. After all this time, would think I'm going to admit I can't get along without them?"

Their parents came for three days, when Marcia was her sicks at was an uncomfortable time for all of them. The girls had both gone home for Christmas, and in the excuement of being back and seeing everybody—in the special, unchanging aura of their thanks—it had seemed almost as if they had never been away that here in New York it was different. Mr. and Mrs. Lished were such strangers, so out of place, in the city where their daughters were so thoroughly at home. They were the ones who had to ask questions, who did not know what to do or where to give with often did not understand what Zelda and Marcia were taking about.

As soon as Marcia railied, they left—with relicf, Zelda though

Marcia asked her. "Seeing them didn't make you homesick, did it?"

so me of humble and papa—Marcia, was papa never more this a display of inches taller than I am?"

when she was allowed to have company, Marcia would be She said it was because she looked awful, and what rill see the beautiful soul behind a first thing in th But it's hard on you, Zel, being here every ever ht to take a night off "

Bur Zelda wouldn't miss an evening. On Saturdays st fough at the office at one o'clock, and she went right a ibital and stayed until visitors had to leave, and on Si was there all day.

You're a peach, Zel," Marcia said. "I won't forget it."

"You'd do the same for me." Zelda said.

Repecially, she thought, if you'd been carrying on with my hand my back and felt rotten about it, now that it was one knew there was no way you could ever feel better, better ast you could show you had some kind of decency.

For a long time her behavior with Lex-which she had rai reed quite satisfactorily while it was going on-grawed ad appalled her. The man her sister loved. How could ive done it? She had always thought she had principle case of honor and lovalty, yet she had been willing to toss ever ming away to be in Lex's aims. What sort of girl was she? byway, the kind of girl she had always thought she was. She believed when Marcia was so sick that she was going to If that that would be her retribution, but Marcia fought ritonitis and got better, and Zelda realized it would have pretty unfair arrangement after all, to have Marcia die in in punish Zelda for deceiving her. After a while, Zelda all Frot that she had behaved so badly. She only remember en someone said, "How could So-and-So have done sign

If Tofty asks you to marry him soon," Marcia said to welld of her stay in the hospital, "let's make it a doub We ought to, you know. Two best friends

lda smiled. Marcia could be so sentimental fde the was making at least five thousand the bank," their mind You're making twenty-five a week, are you can get along on that for a while. Anyhow," practically, "his family's as rich as cream. They won't are."

wony won't take anything from his family. I'm not sure he inche to work, either. He's funny about some things."

Line to work, either. He's funny about some things."

Line as aid, "Not Lex, thank goodness. If I quit my job, he'd cancel everything. And why not? Why should the beautiful the shippard, while I sit on my behind any the the money. Marirage is supposed to be a partnership."

grou'd be taking are of the home, wouldn't you?"

Marcia raised her eyebrows. "Me? You know better. The way the care of a home, I can do it with my left hand. Fix my allows, will you, Zel, and wind me up a little. Thanks." She worked speculatively at Zelda. "I think you could get him to be strongly you now if you played your cards right."

An not very good at that kind of thing. I have to act the feel," Zelda said. "Anyhow, I wouldn't want to trick him inarrying me before he was really anxious to."

Don't be an idiot. If every girl telt that way, nobody would the married. Men are never anxious to marry. One way or they all have to be tricked into it."

bat's a horrid idea," Zelda said. "I don't believe it."

the couldn't help wondering. Marcia was not yet twenty out she knew a lot about men. When Zelda went out with the high high night she looked at him in a new way, and tried to be looked at him in a new way, and tried to be looked at him in a new way, and tried to be looked at him in a new way, and tried to be looked at him in a new way, and tried to be looked at him in a new way, and tried to be looked at him in a new way, and tried to be looked at him in a new way, and tried to show a looked to be looked at him in a new way, and tried to show a looked to be looked at him in a new way, and tried to show a looked to show a looked aturday night and, as it turned out, Tony's birthday is beck a birthday procest. We to going Miss Lisbon, dear. We'll stop at your place wh four finest finery, and then-look-" He produced "I've got you an orchid, a beautiful five buck orchid if give you a rough idea of the spirit of things." be smiled at him. "I've never seen you like this. Is a'money?"

Fust the money, she says! Woman, do you realize that the I got out of college I've had to think six times before ent a buck? I haven't been in a first-class restaurant or show from orchestra seats or ridden in a taxi in two years Conight all that will be changed. And you want to know it the money!"

She looked at him through the gloom of the cab in which these were riding down to the Studio. He had his hat at an angle on the back of his head, a black homburg, she aw now. She wise moticed for the first time that he was weating a tuxedo unde black chesterfield, and that he had had several drinks.

"If all that means so much to you," she said, "I don't see with wor didn't go into your father's business.'

"It doesn't mean that much to me," he said. "Everything a elative."

They went to the Ritz-Carlton first. When Tony saw on the bufferin board in the lobby that a wedding reception was going the Crystal Room, he decided they would crash it. Zeld diane see how you could crash a wedding reception, but strand out to be quite easy. They just whiked in.

There must be a thousand people Here," Zelda whispe

Who do you suppose they are?"

There aren't a thousand," he said. "And all they are. hit, is rich, like almost everybody except us. In the maybe."

Relda had never seen anything like it. There were least around the room, heaped with food-turkey and

West belief the second of the Toyou like all this?" Zelda asked Tony, bursting a light as large as a fair-sized pearl between her tongue and the large her mouth. "I mean, would you want to live this way, and squinted at her over his glass of champagne "Why no wouldn't you?"

Not especially. I've not pretty simple tastes," she said. "I'the a hamburger and ontons in preference to pheasant any days the went on quickly, not stopping to think whether or not whe she was saying was true, "And I wouldn't give two cents all the diamonds in the world."

grinhed. "You con't think I'd let you go around practically paked, without any jewelry, do you? How would it look, man in my position?"

She might have been able to clinch it right then and there. She might have asked, "What have I to do with how it would look for you" or even more directly, "Maybe your wife will prefer diamonds." Marcia would have been impatient with her letting the chance slip. But she couldn't do it. She didn't know why, but she couldn't.

"I'll have all this some day if I want it." Tony waved his hare a little unsteadily and almost knocked the glass out of another man's grasp. "I'll have everything I want." He peered at his heavy eyebrows drawn together in a frown. "You don't have it jewelry to make money," he said with tipsy earnestness that it jewelry to do is be smart at something and work hard an it you're smart enough and work hard enough you, can make the of money."

They left a few minutes later, headed for the Pennsylvania walk," Tony said. "I'm sort of tight."

Ment along Madison Avenue in silence for a while. Z support and are enjoyed a good ringe at well always been more serious than any of the

He never drank too much and he didn't take it for grank every girl he saw would eventually be ready to sleep if he just worked it right. And when he talked about it was with enthusiasm for the work itself and for its fulfield of endeavor and accomplishment, rather than just and of becoming rich. Zelda felt now as if she did not less that all. She felt depressed and hopeless. With all these he had, it would be years before he'd want to get marries to the Pennsylvania," she said. "I don't think I want to go home Why?" He turned and looked at her and then took hold elbow. "Have I done something, Zel?"

No." She shook her head. "No, you haven't done anything the "She stared up at him helplessly, the tears springing to eyes. "I don't want to be rich," she said toolishly, scarcely the bound was saying. "I don't care about it at all." It is a laughed gently. "All right," he said. "All right, Zel, you thave to be." He sounded more like himself now. The sounded more like himself now the sounded more like himself now. The sounded more like himself now.

the was wonderful after that. They stayed at the Pennsylving time, dancing to Guy Lomburdo's orchestra, and he would be the control of the cheek against hers, and told her how lucky has been anyone like her.

rdidn't think you'd ever really fall for me," he said that the said anything for anyone you cared about."

he said, after a long pause. "Maybe I would."

left the Pennsylvania a little after one and went to the club called the Villa Venice, or more familiary Ten E the its address at Ten East 60th Street. It was about to left in the morning at Ten East that Tony asked Zelda by him.

They had just finished a dance and were sitting at their talk in corner of the room. Tony gulped some black coffee—he we aways drinking black coffee; this was his fourth cup of the mannage—and then put the cup down and stared at the table

Zel, you know what this celebration was really about?

isked her. "My freedom."

What do you mean?" She leaned across the table toward him

No." He looked up at her and grinned suddenly. "No, Ze in quite. But I was—well, crazy—really crazy, I think not the property of the property

d pot speak for a long time. Then she said, "But the talk hetore, all and the more persons are you which idea of showing that girl (that birch, she that you can make a lot of money too at the made a mistake—well then you're not really free to

The stared at her. "What do you mean? What makes you making anything I said about making money has any connection with her?"

La don't know," Zelda said. "It was just an idea."

Well, it's a crazy one," he said. "I don't give a damn about the anything of the control of the

"I'm glad."

He smiled and said, almost shyly, "I think we ought to get!"

She could feel herself beginning to shake inside, but she happed her hands hard together so it wouldn't show. If she happed sense, she told herself, she would just say yes and let it go that, but she always had to dig into things.

You've said so many times you wouldn't," she said, "until you were making much more money and had more in the bank."

You," he said. "You, Zel. Because I love you so much I count any more. That is, if you're willing to take a chance?" She believed him. She had to believe him. "Yes," she will. "Yes, I'm willing."

He kissed her, and nobody paid any attention. People with a livery kissing openly, in all sorts of places. "You won't be sirry. We'll be happy," he said. "It may be sort of a strong to first, but not for long. A man has to be a fool to strong the days."

When they got outside it had begun to snow. "love to the day of my engine and the day of my engi

The second of the depart. I'm going the second of the seco the time your sister was in the hospital, was she?"

which has been engaged to Mr. Della but she broke it off. Then apparently when Mr. Whitton a your sister married, she decided she had made a mistake at the married Mr. Dellett after all." He smiled at Zelda. Tould be a coincidence, of course But it looks as if there some connection, wouldn't you say? As it Mrs. Dellett and Whitton had been more than just casual friends?"

"Maybe. I didn't know anything about that," she said true fully. "I was busy with my own wedding plans. But I still case the importance of any of this. Suppose Lex did have affair with Nancy Dellett over twenty years ago, before either a them was married. How could that possibly make him a possecurity risk now?"

'Mr. Nye stared out the window. "I'm trying to start at the beginning, that's all. The chances are there's nothing to it and how." He repeated in his mild, almost apologetic way, "Maye to be careful and thorough."

Someone knocked on the door, and Zelda called out, "Yes?"

"I just want to know how much longer you'll be," Tony and from the hall, without opening the door. "I thought we might make the last show at the movies, if it isn't going to take much longer."

Mr. Nye looked at his watch and stood up. "You go ahead?" his said: "Sorry to have kept you so long. I can come back and other time."

Bir Zeilla was in no mood for the movies. "Why con't you was take hear" she asked Tony after Mr. Nye had gone. "I don't was his going out."

it on faded blue denim slacks and a loud and the office he made a point of dressing conservative at made him stand out among other advertising mentioned always dressed that way when she first knew him carried it to extremes. Whenever she thought of him to she pictured him in an oxford gray suit and a black and been, in a curious way, a kind of rebellion, she was at the tow he did not appear to be rebelling any longer, not become so conventional as to amount to the uniform, insiddle-aged commuter at ease. He still looked a little stranger in them.

The wanted to know if Lex was a ladies' man," she said.

finished yet."

Tony grinned. "If that's going to keep Lex out of the State Courtment, he's through. He was the five-star wolf of Greek Willage. But why should anybody care now, after all the state?"

There he was again, talking about Lex in that good-fellows.

icre's a real man for you.

The moved her shoulders impatiently. "I don't know. I ask Nye that myself. He says he has to start at the beginning." That's a clever place to start. Unique. Oh well, I guess to make a living too." He turned in his chair and lines the papers on the desk. "I think I'll work a little, there are not going out." As she stood up to leave he asked. "I think I'll work a little, there are not going out."

Nor But I really don't think there's anything to worry all right. If it's a new girl, I personally feel it's a

I don't like what Libby was doing to him."

Show?" He looked up at her in surprise. "I always up; a pencil and bending over his thew he supposed nothing of the sort. They had the and Jim. All you had to do was see them together him's carefully elaborated courtesy toward him would know. It had been serious, Zelda was sure, yet Toward discussing it with her as he would have done ordinarly that proved she had been right all along about Jim's a length there. Tony would admit it sooner or later, but a length him stew a little. Maybe another time he'd listen to here him stew a little. Maybe another time he'd listen to here him she felt a little sorry for him, and before she left the roots his cheek and murmured, "Everything will be all descrettes. Once Tony accepted the fact that Jim was out of his content and let him go where he could use the ability he had been and let him go where he could use the ability he had been and been much happier, and so would she. If this quarre had it in some way it had extended to Libby, which it appare had been and she had said in effect that he'd have to stand in the office and she had said in effect that he'd have to stand in the office her) that was better still. He would find the right gift one who would encourage him to do what he was fitted what he really wanted to do.

the telephone rang as she reached the front hall. It was the property for the sounding voice, though almost without acceptable for Ann.

is this, please?"

Atthacht Weber here," he said. "I am the swimming in ine sounded familiar. She supposed Ann must have and pure it is the first and a

Just something about camp."

went out to the terrace and sat on the glider, rocated back and forth with her foot. It was only when to there alone that she could ger exactly the rhythm, the amounting, she wanted. Tony liked to swing intermittently, has made her dizzy; Jim pushed the glider so hard that it is also be alone to relax; and Ann did not care about swinging at the some day there might come a time when she could do exactly she pleased whenever she pleased—eat everything she like the pleased whenever she pleased—eat everything she like the pleased of catering to other people's tastes; live by a routine that the pleased herself, or by no routine at all; rock the glider in her or any at any hour of the day or night. It would have its advantages, but they would be outweighed by loneliness. If you hated to live your own lite, you had to live alone.

She lit a cigarette and leaned back, looking at the black sky brough the trees that had begun to sur a little now in a cooling night breeze. Tony had once told her that they owned every, thing over their property, three miles up into the sky. The idea ilways fascinated her—the idea of owning part of the sky. I must remind Rena to brush that cloud away and polish up the idea star over the dogwood tree . . .

If only she could just sit here quietly like this and enjoy her and her trees and her sky, and not think of anything observance people could. Some people somewhere. The Australian aborigines, for instance. She had read about them once. The worked only enough to produce what they needed to live, and entrybody shared in it. The rest of the time they made love and cause that they had was all they wanted and no one of them had more nor than anyone clse, they had no need to wage war in thinggle or fight among themselves. Of course they were confidence, nothing but savages.

How did I get here, Zelda wondered, on this mention the amplitudes in the section in the was val to enjoy surviving? You could blank.

again. You could blame "the times." But socie and they had made the times. She had made them

Larcia and Lex and Tony-and Nancy Dellett.

righed, and pushed lightly against the flagstones with that the glider rocked gently. The layers of years in intened and muffled the voice of doubt. Only once before mans ago, had it broken through and screamed in her ear th Maney Dellett had never really lost her hold on Tony, that had convinced himself he loved Zelda and wanted to marry he herause he thought that was the best way to cure himself.

The voice was not screaming now, but she could hear plainly. Mr. Nye had brought it all back to her. How did shi know everything was over? She wanted to think so, and she had wasn't always of thinking what she wanted to, but it wasn't always possible.

.: I'm trying to frighten myself again, she thought, and rement bered the time a tew weeks ago when Tony's train had been hate and she had imagined an accident, Tony killed, and he life going on without him. She was being neurotic again, in agining things because someone had mentioned Nancy Dellett's папте.

As she swood up to go into the house. Marcia and Lev drove into the garage, and she waited, feeling she did not want to tell them at that moment, but after a few minutes Lex came to the terrace, looking for her.

Hello," he said. "I ony said you were out here."

Where's Marcia ""

"She's coming." He sat down on the wrought iron chaise an lockened his rie. He always wore a jacket and tie, urdess it was unbearably hot, "She had to go to the little girl's room," He said, the was the only man she knew who could have made that without sounding coyly vulgar. There was in him some midestructible and mysterious—personality, charm, anima d over that he wash't ay from him.

minted to talk to you alone anyway," he said. "I wa

what happened with Dick Tracy."

sat down again, not on the glider this time but whi chair. She felt better able to deal with him from dht chair.

That makes you think anything happened that can't passed in front of Marcia?"

is smiled, and it occurred to her suddenly to wonder whether marvelous teeth were the same ones with which he ied at her twenty-five years before.

We don't have to pretend with each other, Zel. We're oht ands. You know there are all kinds of things in my life ! blthn't want Marcia to hear about."

don't know anything of the sort. I lost track of you a long ne ago. Besides, what possible difference can it make to Marcia f.more?"

le leaned back, and a light from the house picked up the conof his profile. His unfading good looks were gratuitous thought. He could have been ugly and fared as well, is You can't have missed the fact," he said with amusement it I'm courting Marcia." He added seriously, "I wouldn nt it spoiled."

Are you in love with her, Lex?"

te did not answer immediately. When he did speak, he can mied looking at the sky, and his voice was quiet.

I'm very fond of her, and I think we could get along are we couldn't before. She wouldn't expect as much of s found out there are harder weaknesses to live with Me. And I'd be marrying her for better reasons than: first time—for companionship and comfort." The kind of comfort her money will buy?" Zelda as

wis. Our quarrels were only because she want into something I couldn't be, but she knows we'll be all right together." He smiled a little.

Nothing else will get her a man any more, Zel. I know to experience her and enjoy her, but you have to remember nearing fifty now and fat, and somebody's likely to make and grab everything she has and then walk out on her.

Adda's throat burned with tears, but whether for Marcia of Lex or for all the pittful compromises people became willing thanke with life she did not know.

There's probably something wrong with that, but I'm no what it is. You could always make anything sound play the," she said. "I still believe in love, though. Perhaps that abbecoming at my age? But I think that was a better reason to macroing Marcia than this, even if it didn't work out."

His leaned back again, not looking at her. "I didn't say looking at her. "I didn't say looking the reason the first time. It wasn't. I had no intention the reason the first time. I did it out of what is classically above as pique."

"Plaue? Who piqued you?"

You. You and Tony," he said. "I always seemed to was

Was thinking what strange and ineffectual words those were the use, she was repeating them. "Cut it out."

the thiled. "There's nothing to cut out, Zel. I'm just statuted the lates, that's all. I know there isn't anything to be done this like. And now tell me, before Marcia gets back," what that fellow wanted to know."

tolked down at him, and she didn't know whether he was a simple

Nye taked me about you and Nancy Dellett, then she walked away from him, into the house.

se-party was not like any Jim had ever seen. There was a liquor, and everybody drank all night, but nobody got had or sick or even very high, as far as he could notice. The liquoded, and the more they drank the more intellectual their talk counded. He could not always follow it, but he enjoyed lister anyhow. They all seemed to consider him part of whatever the country was going on, even if he didn't contribute anything once way or other they made him feel that he belonged there had he was the host, and he got a kick out of that. He was bered if they had any idea how old he was.

Hallie did, anyway—at least, she probably did, since it would be easy enough to find out at the office—and it made no difference to her. It wouldn't to her friends either, he was sure. Against nothing to do with a group like this.

Someone put a record on the phonograph, and after a moment, woman asked, "Good God, must we have that?" She was a woman dressed in something black that showed off a good figure. He thought she was the one who was an edited a some fashion magazine. "I can't stand Wagner," she said. All that bombast. I'm sure he's carrying on like that in Hell, is slimy little man, and I hope he's bursting the eardrung of henchmen, Hitler and Nietzsche and the rest, but I dank the why he has to offend mine."

The man who had put the record on shrugged his shoulders that remed it off again. "All right. I can listen some other times but you're dangerously off the beam, Maida—you know that you? Condemning the music because the musicial lifestory doesn't conform to yours? Shades of the Committee.

parties formed in, and for a few minutes jung groups to get heated, but then it all petered out as it it exome bored with the subject and didn't care about settle. But were that way with everything that came up.

daybe you'd like a little boogie woogie," a tall man uncontroversial stuff, whatever else you may think of about it, Earl?"

the one who had argued for Wagner shrugged again, and thown at the piano. He was a short, pudgy man with glasses, better somebody—not a medical doctor, but a Ph.D. Earlier the evening he had been explaining the derivation of the work salery, something about its coming from the Latin word taken which was once used for paying soldiers. Now he sat stiffy at the piano and played hot music without changing the expression of his face or moving a muscle he didn't need to play. The piano looked at him, you wanted to burst out laughing, but if you closed your eyes it sounded fine.

"How you like"

He looked up to see Hallie smiling at him. She sat on the arm of his chair and put her hand on his shoulder, and he teached up and took the hand and held it. A few weeks ago he wouldn't have done that, but he had learned a lot in a few weeks.

"You mean the music?" he asked her. "It's okay. He's pretty good,"

"No, I mean the party. My friends. I'm showing you off; Everything's swell," he said.

The didn't know what there was about him to show off to the like this. They were all brainy people, smooth people who ones who lunched at Whitney's, and half the time like the ones who lunched at Whitney's, and half the time like the control of the like t

"I don't kaobi wasti waxe danay in suwa. Salik Mari know.

with all week in a greet face, and he wore a ring of the said, a countess Mara tie. "You," he said, a point his eyes always seemed to be staring. "Have you prea!"

"Not yet," Jim said.

Well, how do you feel about it? If you have to go, will have why?"

This was the kind of talk that was all right with a bunch year, age. You could bat it around and say what you thought and if you didn't put it too well no one cared. No one cared, in the care and it wouldn't change mything. But here, in a crowd like this, you were expected to be deep and clever.

I think so," he said slowly. "I think it's because if we don't map them in Korea they'll break out all over, because they'll feel they can get away with it"

He looked down at Hallie to see if it had sounded all right, but he couldn't tell from her face. She just seemed to be listenjirg.

"That's an oversimplification," the thin man said. "They're coing to break out anyway, whenever and wherever they see his what will we do? Send men scurrying to be killed in every couble spot on the globe? Where will we get that many men?"
"I think—" someone began, but the other man cut him off.

I'm asking this young fellow," he said. "He's directly invelved. I want his opinion."

Jim shifted in his chair. "Maybe they won't be in such a hurry to start something again, if we stop them here. If they do well kiguess we'll have so handle it as it comes up. I don't see when the we can do. We can't sit back, and let them push everyhold wound."

Someone said, "Hear, hear," and Jim couldn't tell whather it was a joke or not, but either way it embarrassed him.

And you're willing to slog around in the Kodian regis thin man that the master that it is the property of the second was a few years ago won't be present the second was a few years ago won't be present the second was a few years ago won't be present the second was a few years ago won't be present the second was a few years ago won't be present the second was a few years ago won't be present the second was a few years ago won't be seen ago with the second was a few years ago won't be seen ago with the second was a few years ago won't be present the second was a few years ago won't be present the second was a few years ago won't be presented with the second was a few years ago won't be presented with the second was a few years ago won't be presented with the second was a few years ago won't be presented with the second was a few years ago won't be presented with the second was a few years ago won't be presented with the second was a few years ago won't be presented with the second was a few years ago won't be presented with the second was a few years ago won't be presented with the second was a few years ago.

m surprised you haven't enlisted, if you feel that way," thin man said. "What are you waiting for?"

in. None, he was willing to bet. He was a 4 F if he'd ever seen one, and besides he talked like a Commie.

"I'm in no hurry," Jim said. "They'll let me know when the need me." He got up, pulling Hallie with him. "Come on he said. "Let's get a drink."

"living room. Behind them the talk swelled again, swallowing up what Jim and the thin may had said. Jim mixed two highs balls, the way Hallie liked them

"I'm surry," she said.

"What for?" He concentrated on snaring ice cubes with the silver tongs. "What have you got to be sorry for?"

She lit a cigarette and leaned against the bar. He could fee her eyes on his face, but he didn't look up. He was burning and he knew it was silly.

"Clark upset you," she said. "I don't like you upset."

"Who is he. anyway"

"Clark Cullen, the illustrator. He was in the Navy for this years in the war, a lieutenant, and he's just been called back. That's why he talks like that He has a boy who was born while was away, and he feels he's just begun to know him."

"The language of people," he said "You should know what his drink down fast, and felt its heat going shall be drink down fast, and felt its heat going shall be dy and thought for a second that he was going to he Hallie and take her out of there, that he couldn't the other minute. But then somebody started playing colleges of the piano, some Penn man singing that one about "Any day, lady?" and it was such a funny note just then that it may life all right again.

I was thinking."

was something, though, what she could do to him, this state of never felt this way about anybody, never this worked with his life. The thing was he'd never known a girl like her. It is had a few girls, the kind who didn't stop you in the base is car or on the sofa when nobody was home, and once offer had a room somewhere and that had been pretty awing it had never been such a big deal when you came right down it, just something you took because it was there, it was extended of you, and you got to thinking you wanted it. And their were the girls who did stop you, and you knew they were ling to so you sort of geared yourself to it. Someone like Libby, instance— But he didn't want to think of Libby.

Hallie Breed was different. She was smart and attractive and thisticated, and he thought she could have had any man alignated. He couldn't see why she was interested in him, but she. There was no question about it. She had let him know that from the beginning that she'd like him to date her, and had made as many advances as he had.

The thing was that he wasn't sure about her. He had kissed he wanted of him, what she expected. He had kissed he had a fight a few times, and she had clung to him and kissed he had clung to him and kissed he had clung to him and him to have smiled at him and pushed him away a little and told him to was time for him to go home. Maybe she wanted him to he wasn't going home, that he was going to stay, was the touldn't tell. He didn't want to put he wasn't want to put he was a sound him to want to be the wasn't want to be wasn't want want wasn't want want wasn't wasn't want wasn't wasn't want wasn't wasn't wasn't wasn't wasn't wasn't wasn't want wasn't want wasn't wasn't wasn't wasn't wasn't wasn't wasn't wasn't want wasn't wasn't check as if to weke him up. "No s long thought. Nickel."

thinking about you," he said,

That's worth at least a quarter." "The tell you later, after they've al! gone."

Someone called to her then, and she left him with a nod mitte wink that meant he shouldn't forget. He went and sto the big windows overlooking Central Park and looked down fe crowded, smoky room and thought that a few weeks ago and never even seen this room and now he knew it so well.

He had never thought before about a room's suiting the pe ble who lived in it. He had never thought much about room at all, the way they were furnished or anything, unless the shoured a lot of money or very little. But this was something had learned from Hallie too. She was sharp about such things, good at putting them into words. Once he had good with her to a cocktail party in the apartment of a man people falled Bobo. He was a small, slight man, in a suit that looked two big for him, and a pin-striped shirt with a separate hard collar. Most of his furniture was velvet with gilt frames, the Bilt wearing off and the velvet losing its nap.

"Bobo retired when he was forty," Hallie said. "He's or sixty now, and living on an annuity that began by keeping him is the style to which he had accustomed himself. He won't fac the fact that it can't any more, and neither will his room. The eding to each other in their laded elegance, in a world that passe them by years ago. This room belongs to Bobo and he belong

To this room, and nowhere else on the modern earth."

Abother time; she referred to a girl who rethinded him a little Af Anny only older, as "chintzy," and when he asked her what ineant she said, "If you saw where she lived you'd know blace looks like one of those four-color pictums in the magazines-How To Do Over Your Living-Room fire sider $100, with slipcovers of glazed chines at $1.98 a yard

Well-philipping Visites High Visites in since his inposts in had never seen a black rug beneficial to had a leither end of the room were gold. Of the st little tables, all different old shapes, stood a land a seal, impressionistically carved out of black wood.

The drapes that covered an entire wall when drawn makes that the covered an entire wall when drawn makes that lamp shade. But it Hallie had asked him why he thousand the room was like her, he could not have put it into words.

way she did.

A girl came over to him now with a drink in her hand. The was the only girl here as young as Hallie, but she was fundy poking, with a big nose and dyed orange hair and short, he was Rhoda Byce and she had some kind of simportant job at the Metropolitan Museum of Art. Everybody pore had some kind of important job somewhere, yet not one of them was in what Jim thought of as "business."

This is you're Hallie's new beau," she said. She had a deep, hoarse being that grated on his ears. "Jim," she said. "Jim Halliday. "Right?" She looked him over. "I don't get it."

"You don't get what?"

"Joe College," she said. "Halke and Joe College It's a new combination." She smiled, and he decided she looked exactly like a horse. "You're kind of pretty, though. All that curly bair."

If He wanted to tell her that she was not kind of pretty. He would have given five bucks to be able to say it, but he couldn't. He couldn't say a thing like that to a girl, no matter how sleet the same of the knew why.

How do you know Hallie?" he asked her.

She put the edge of the glass in her mouth and stuck her tione shows that it, but when she was finished he couldn't see that into ore of the drink was gone. "Everybody knows Halfle."

How? New York's a big place."

It is not." Everything she said sounded rude. "At he are work you do'or how much money you are grandfather was, you know everybody else who san the first of person, or if you don't know 'em you've head showing her big teeth. "The Fraziers know the Huttons and the highest of Chic hates the publisher of Slick and I know Hall Reed."

Before he could ask her in what particular way she and Halliwere the same kind of people, Hallie came back from the other side of the room and joined them. He noticed now that she had on a new dress, and he wished he had noticed it before and said something. He had told her once that he couldn't tell when a black dress wis a real that he always went by the color, and after that she had made him look carefully at everything she wore until he got to know the difference. She said it was one of the things what she called a knowledgeable man should understand

"Well, look." She put her hand through Jim's arm and smiled at Rhoda Evce, "So you two found each other in the jungle." "I found him," Rhoda said. "It wasn't hard. I kept looking behind ears. All the others were bone dry."

Rhoda showed her horse teeth. "God, you're a stinker," said.

"I'm only beating you to it, darling"

"All right," Rhoda said, pleasantly enough. She stuck her note down into her glass again for a second and then took it out. "Laye it your way. You always do anyhow." She got up from the windowsill and began walking away from them. "I don't dig this set-up, though. I really don't You're not that old."

Fallie looked for a minute as though she were going after here this call for another drink?"

shringed Rhoda's a funny disk, but I'm

A quite brilliant, though you'd never guess it meets this. You ought to hear her lecture on art; even be sinds different. She once told me that after she spends the caking at all the beautiful women on the walls of the must begins to feel heautiful herself—and then she sees herself the mirror."

That's sort of gruesome."

Not really. She has a sense of humor about it. Surprisingly hough, she gets along all right with men, though not always the the men she'd chose. You, for instance. Apparently she into make any headway with you."

Film laughed. "She doesn't think much of me."

Don't be dull, lamb. She'd give her eye teeth for you. That's hy she was making the cracks." Hallie looked up at him. "You willy don't know how attractive you are, do you? That's one of your charms."

fint felt himself getting red. Like a Goddam kid, he thought, there was no way to stop it. He couldn't get used to being the things like that, right to his face. They all did it around the, whether what they had to tell you was pleasant or the casent, and everybody else seemed to enjoy it and to have a like a game, their whole way of conversal, and he liked watching it but he wasn't any good at playing thuself. Not yet, anyhow.

Come along," Hallie said. "We'd better get that drink." She, as chuckling a little, laughing at him, but it didn't bother hand. There was something in it, a kind of tenderness, that made him good. She looked up at him. "They're beginning to looked up at him."

Le frinned. "Okay, if you want me to."

I want you to." She smiled up at him. "You look to will want then you grin that way."

stood for a minute and watched her thread through the said of the room.

Let in the middle of the room.

Let us the middle of the room.

Let us the middle of the room.

runned around and looked at him with a little frown.

de didn't wait for the elevator. He bolted down the steps and across Fifth Avenue and began walking along the Single Street transverse through the park. Later he had no ide the was thinking about or why he went that way. If the was thinking about or why he went that way. If the was thinking about or why he went that way. If the blank when you were conscious, he'd have said he wasn't thinking of anything at all. He was halfway across before he represented that his car was parked on East Sixty-Third Street, and he had to the way back.

He began thinking then. He began wondering what Halhe had thought when he ran out like that, and what he would tell her when he saw her again. He'd have to give her some reason, and he'didn't have any reason. He had felt sick to his stomach, that he didn't have any reason. He had felt sick to his stomach, that was all. He'd tell her that. He'd say he had had too much to drink and didn't feel well and thought he'd better get out fast.

As soon as he had decided that, he turned his mind to some thing else altogether. He remembered something his grand after Halliday had told him once about the transverses through contral Park. He must have been about ten and his grandlarhers explaining the plan of the city to him. "And Central Park cut into portions like a pie," he said. "One cut is at Sixty-Pitchia cut, another at Seventy-Ninth, and at Lighty-Sixth and Ninety with. Pour portions of pie for grass-hungry New Yorkers."

Tipo's mother had been in the room at the time, or maybe he had separated it to her later. Anyhow, he remembered that she had saughted and said, "How fanciful of him! I'd never have the had been in the later. Tony gets his imagination."

the lim wanted to think of something else. He thought the printe design the light and the state of the light best in the and had to start looking for a job and getting a sort out, it would be at least another five years. In the care he'd make good pay pretty soon, and he could also married almost right away. He couldn't see much seem asting another year at college, because where was it gots et him, with things the way they were?

That was one problem Jim didn't have anyhow. When the got out, he'd be able to step right into

But he didn't want to think about that. He thought of the man at Hallie's who had asked him how he felt about Korea. People were always asking you that. How the hell did they think you felt? It was a lousy, rotten business and you wished you had been born some other time or something, but there was nothing you could do about it. You hoped you'd be lucky and never have to get into any fighting, that it would be over before they took you, or that you'd be stationed in this country or maybe, there place like Germany, but if you weren't lucky then you'd have to sweat it out like a lot of other guys.

Nobody but the fellows his own age seemed to see it that way, though. The others were bitter, like that one at Hallie's, or least to get into it (to hear them talk, anyhow) and thinking ought to be crazy too.

He'd had a conversation about it with his father once, a year; for so ago, and his father had said, "I don't understand you. Isn't there anything you really care about? I don't want you to go, Lod knows, but you ought to feel differently. You're young. There ought to be something you'd be ready to die for."

"I'm ready," Jim said. "I just don't see why anybody would wint to go running after it, that's all. How many wars did you solt in?"

His father had smiled. "I was thirteen when the first world in ended. When I tried to get into the second one, I was thirteen forty, and the state of the court of the cou

the side of the transverse. He didn't want to have the side of the transverse. He didn't want to have the side of the transverse. He didn't want to have the same of the same he was a little looped. He want used to as much as he'd had tonight. He really didn't have a drink that much because it only made him feel like hell afterwards. For a while at school he hadn't touched it at all heeause he'd been trying out for track, but then he hadn't made the team. The coach said he didn't put his heart into it, but a wasn't that. He just wasn't good enough He wasn't good enough at anything, except maybe putting a motor together, and where did that get you. His father had been on the team when he was at Dartmouth. He had run the hundred in ten secondi-

But Jim wanted to think of something else. Hallie. He started walking again, thinking of Hallie. She could take your mind off anything. That night he'd driven down from Westchester after talking to Ann, not knowing where he was going, just wanting to get away somewhere, and Hallie was the one who had two hours, and then all at once he had remembered that she'd told him he could drop in any time.

"I'm glad you came," she had said. "I've been hoping you would."

He answered, not very tactfully, "I didn't know where else to go," but she didn't seem to mind.

"You can always come here" she said

"You're swell. You act as if you'd known me all my life."

buy so I could have mussed up your curls. You'd have hated in buy I'd have done it anyway."

He still did hate it. He couldn't stand anybody fooling with his hair. But he grinned at her and said, "It's not too late."

But he grinned at her and said, it's not too late.

the met his tried to treat her imperionally in the line of the lin

Firm hadn't bothered to deny anything. "Careful in what we asked politely. "Do you think she'll lead me astray?"

His father rattled the paper, and Jim knew he had succeed in annoying him, but it didn't show in his voice when he special don't think I've ever interfered with you much. Jim. I always made up my mind I wouldn't, that I'd remember how I'ke then my parents tried to interfere with me. This is just a work caution, that's all, and then you can do as you like."

"Yes, sir?" Jim said, though he had never in his life called

Tony glanced at him and then back at his paper. "Hallied any over your head, believe me. She's much older than you, not haly in years but in every other way. She's quicker and smarter and smoother than you'll be in ten years, or maybe than you'll be per be. Why should she be interested in a kid like you?" He speed and put down his paper and shook his head. "I'm not sing this very well, am I? I'm saying all the wrong thing he trouble is I'm young enough to know how you feel, and old rough to know it isn't any good." He looked out the window Maybe that's why it's so damn tough to be a parent now. There was a generation of parents that stayed young so long." I see." Jim said.

All right," his father said angrily. "All I want to tell you has Hallie's after something, and you'd better watch it or you'd better watch it or you'd better watch it or you'd

"I'll bet you do at that," Jim said

The began to run through the transverse, saying Goddarin fast, to the state of the change repeating their two philarings are part of the change repeating their two philarings are part of times before she answered.

The lated working in the library. He had never liked it much a stayed away from it when he could. The library had to tense, too unnaturally quiet. All those guy here it in the could be something they had to know for a stay. But here everything was relaxed, and you got the feeling that people were quiet because they wanted to be, because they had come here to read a mething or look something up that they were interested in knowing

Not that he usually was much interested himself in what he was looking up. The stuff on plastics was all right, and he didn't mind knowing about old sailing ships, but he sure as hell didn't care how many different kinds of tea there were, for instance. But it was all right. It was easy. He didn't have to remember any of it or worry about getting marked on it. He just wrote down whatever he could find and took it back to the office so the copy writers could use it. If he felt like it, he could make the job list: It was cool in there, peaceful, and nobody knew him. If he was tired, he could keep a book open on the table in front of him and take a little nap.

This time it was a few days after the party at Hathe's. He had bound out as much as he needed on the growing of pineapple so that the copywriters could tell about the lovely people who had gone to all that trouble and expense just so you could have that deficious canned fruit at your table. He debated whether he smooth stay around a little longer, but it was nice out, cooler, and be thought he'd take a slow walk instead, up toward the office.

He didn't pay any attention to the sailor leaning up against of the stone lions, didn't even see him until the sailor moved in the sailor moved in "The drawled. "You go ma pass me by?"

It was been written and crackers, editional ever wick! For pete's sake, Wick! What the hell are you were home in Tonnessee. What the you in that sailor suit for?"

Your mom told me you were working, so I called up the mod they told me you were at the library, so I came to was a work."

You dope! What if I hadn't come out this way? This feating library. This isn't Wickford, Tennessee. It's New York; semember?"

"Yeah," Wick said. "I remember. That's why I came, the first three-day pass I got."

"Wait a minute. Now wait a minute Look, we've got to go wome place and talk. I'm getting dizzy. Why didn't you tell me you were in the Navy? Why the Navy anyhow? I thought it was going to be the Air Force, if anything. Come on "He took Wick's arm. "I know a place with a good bar."

The was funny, Jim thought afterwards, that he should have taken Wick to Whitney's. If he didn't belong there himself, Wick certainly didn't. The town he came from in Tennessee was named after his family, so they must have had some prestige, that Wick always acted like a hillbrily. Three years of college hadn't changed him.

It ain't the Navy," he told Jim as they walked up Fifth Aveinue. "See that?" He pointed to a shield on his sleeve. "That shows it's the Coast Guard."

"The Coast Guard. How come?"

"Well, I don't know," Wick said. "Everybody told me something different. You know how they do. They said the shir Force isn't so hot any more. You don't get all the special staff you used to, and you get killed awful easy. A guy I met in the Coast Gyard, he said this was the best deal because it's clean and anistly you just take care of the coast or cruise around some where the a boat. The worst you do, if there's a big war, you are you This guy the state a greet stationed in Material of having the was as crowded now, at almost three to the same one. It was afraid Wick would feel conspiculties be was the only one there in uniform. He was proportionally and anyway, with his bright red hair and six-foot-foot-being and hillbilly drawl. But nobody paid any attention. It should have known better. If they had, it wouldn't have bothered the pushed his sailor hat to the back of his head and crimed at the bartender and ordered a beer. You didn't drink beer at the Whitney bar at three in the afternoon, but Jimoordered one too

""Well, how is it so far?" Jim asked him. "Where are you stationed, anyhow?"

"Cape May." Wick said. "Boot camp. It's okay now, but after the summer they say everybody goes home and everything closed up and it's the stinkingest little dead town you ever saw. The base is nice, though. Lots of steak and all."

"Why didn't you let me know? You didn't have to be in such a hurry for the Coast Guard, did you? Why didn't you talk to me or something?"

Wick made a funnel of his mouth and poured the beer down steadily. When it was gone he said, "I had enough talk. That's all I had since I got back home, talk. Enlist. Don't enlist. The Air Force is good, the Air Force is lousy. The Navy is what you ought to get into. If you get in the Navy you never get out. The Coast Guard—" He hanged his glass on the har. "Hey, son, another beer, please! The Coast Guard was closing their enlistements. I had to make up my mind, so I did. That's one thing." He grinned. "I don't have to worry no more or listen to no more talk. I did it."

"Yeah," Jim said. "I know what you mean." He rolled his glass around between his hands. "What about Helen?"

"Riches?" He said the name as if he wasn't sure who Jim means, "She'll keep, I guess She kept nearly six years already, so I green a little longer won't hurt anything." He looked sides.

ell, her taid, "I might."

fow if you got other plans or anything-who. No, I haven't any plans. Hell, and what if I delete byhow? I couldn't let you waste your three day pass, couldn't let you waste your three day pass, couldn't let you a girl for me." Wick said to Maybe Libby would know a girl for me," Wick said.

Libby. Yes, I guess maybe she would." Jim slid off his see Look, I've got to get back to the office now. I'm not suppose stay out this long. I'll see what I can fix up and call you have where are you stopping anyway?"

"I've got a room at the Hotel Waldorf." Wick said.

Jim stared at him. "The Waldorf? The one on Park Avenue":
"Sure," Wick said. "I haven't got anything better to spend;

my pay on than a bang-up couple days."

When Jim got back to the office, there was a message that his lather wanted to see him as soon as he came in. He took his notes from the library with him. Now that he looked at them, they didn't seem like so much for four hours work. But his lather wasn't likely to ask for them. He never had before.

Miss Regan, his father's secretary, told him to go right in. She was a nice-looking woman. There wasn't a bad-looking worsan' in the place.

"He's waiting for you, Mr. Halliday," she said.

He still couldn't get used to people's calling him Mr. Halliday.

Not that many did. But he always felt a little as if they were hidding him.

He opened the heavy flush door and let it swing silently chief behind him. His father sat at a huge circular mahogany design the middle of the room. There was a handsome dark this knoleum on the floor instead of a rug, because Tony rolled himself all over the room in his swivel chair, around his designation which desk to the ceiling-high bookcases that lined the winds and to the windows that looked out over most of the roots and a contour chairs in the last two straight-backed ones and a contour chair, which the last last be very forceful," he had told Jim once.

te was nothing else in the room but a water cooler. in one panel of the wall, and a pastel drawing of Ze The two children, done when I m was about twelve, in man alors and a sugary style that did not belong in this room at a hen Jim entered, his father had a layout spread out on t desk, and he had rolled his chair around in front to look at is that his back was to the door. He said, "Sit down, Jim," with but looking up

Firm sat in one of the straight chairs. His belt felt too time actoss his stomach

2"This is the double page Man with the Sling spread for the "New Yorker" his father said. "Want to take a look?"

"I never can tell much from layouts."

*All right. I'll explain it to you"

Fin got up obediently and bent over the sheet. There we two sketchy diawings of a man with his arm in a sling. On on side he was sitting at a table with other figures and a bottle and plass. On the other side he was in an easy chair by himself, with a glass in his hand. Blocks of what would be type ran down ne to each picture, under the two headings. At the Club and A Hame.

Tony started to say something. "I get it," Jim broke in. "I protty simple."

" "Yes," his father said. "All good advertising is simple."

Ting went back to his chair and sar down. He looked up the criling. "Isn't it getting to be a little silly, though? This gui with his arm in a sling all these weeks? No matter what he die his arm it wouldn't be in a sling this long." He felt as if h had no keep on talking. "Look at that New Yorker cartoo the plastic surgeon's of the plastic surgeon's office wir arms in slings. Everybody's laughing at the who It can't-"

security of the later was climated in the later of the la

Jim could not think of anything else to say.

Well." His father pushed himself around to the right the desk, his chair sailing over the waxed linoleum like in the best of the desk, his chair sailing over the waxed linoleum like in the spending so much time out of the office. Four hours this morning, for instance. It doesn't look right, Jim. After all you're not an account executive. You're supposed to be starting the bottom, and there's not much leisure at the bottom."

"I was at the library," Jim said. "I was doing research on phineapple."

His father smiled a little. "I know, I keep in touch. It didn't take you four hours. In an hour—possibly an hour and a half—could get enough dope on pineapple to write a treatise."

Maybe," Jim said. "But I'm not a Phi Bete."

What's the matter, Jim? What's this resentment you've worked have these past few weeks? We'd better have it out."

There's nothing to have out.

His father sighed. "Listen, I don't want to get sentimental But I always thought we were pretty good friends and that we had respect for each other not only as father and son but as men." Thought—"

Excuse me," Jim said, "but it seems to me you are being thentimental. You can't get away from being father and son."

don't intend to try. All I mean is that fathers and sons don't always feel as they're supposed to just because of their delationship, but I thought you and I did. I've taken it fail that if you were in any kind of jam, mental, emotional, nything, eyou'd give me a chance to see if I could help,"

I think you're still being sentimental. The only kind is the wie his poor, making a mainthrone Jim we said. "I don't know w re store at me about something, let's have a at somebody or something else, don't take it some Thout like people working for me with a chip on the

Tim asked courteously, "Would you rather I'd quit?"

His father looked at him sharply. "Lo you want to quit?" Mint it? You don't have to be afraid to say so. Plenty of fellowing and like working for their fathers." He smiled. "I won't be offended, I promise you."

"You don't have to worry," Jim said. 'If I ever decide I wanted to guit I'll let you know right away."

. His father didn't answer. He was making a mess of the layour and that pansy, Stillman, who had probably done it, was going to be rarting around the office, waving his hands and yell. ing that nobody had any respect for craftsmanship, the way he did almost every day.

"All right, him. We don't seem to be getting anywhere." His father looked up at him. "You've learned something here at that." haven't you? For a beginner, that was as fine a job of fogging "the issue with words as I've ever heard"

lim waited a minute, and then since his father seemed to be finished, he got up and moved toward the door,

Behind lum, Tony said, "It would probably do me a lot of $\frac{1}{2}$ good to kick you through that door. But as you say, we can't way from being father and son. So take your four-hour in history of the pineapple to the copy department and get back? to your desk."

Jim went down the hall to Hallie's office. He felt great, all kered up. He didn't know when he had felt so good, as if he could do anything. Hallie was alone in her office, too.

She said, "Hello, darling," in a low voice. "Say, you're boking mighty pleased with yourself. What have you pulled off?"

"Nothing. My roommate's in town. We had a couple of He didn't say beer. Here. Do you want to take charge whispered. "Please. I like this Well? Is anybody firing you?"

Asten lamb, if your father thought-"

My father already thinks," he broke in. He had never this before, "So what?"

The sat up straight. "Wait a minute. A little slower. What mean, your father already thinks?"

"Just what I say." He hitched himself up on a corner of his and grinned at her. "He warned me against you some this

What do you mean?"

The trouble with him is he can't see how irresistible I are thinks you must be after something. My tortune, no doubt, byhow, I told him to turn blue."

Hallie frowned and rubbed the eraser end of a pencil up and the her cheek. "I don't like this," she said. "I don't like it the like bit." She got up and began walking around the office fammy, you'd better stay away from me altogether down here, more lunches, no more talk, even, unless other people are, found. Tell your father you're not seeing me any more. Hell lieve you, won't he?"

Maybe not, but he's running mine right now." She turned found to Jim, jamming her hands into the pockets of her skips we got a good job here. I've got a future. Your father early his fingers and cancel it all out. If he wants to, he can make though for me to go anywhere else. Advertising is a small world."

He's not going to fire you. He'd have done it by now. White tould be the sense, anyhow? I could keep on seeing you went"

I'm taking no chances. Even if he kept me on, I would ence dat in the season of the season of the desk again to the season of the season of John't see why you did. Maybe I'd better just fade onthe style you're concerned, and not only down here. Then you'dn't have to worry any more You'd be nice and safe in little job."

ch, Jim, don't be childish."

I thought we'd get around to that, sooner or later."

She spread her fingers our meticulously on the desk. "I

If wish you wouldn't call me that."

"Jim," she said, and then repeated it. "Jim. Remember all this different for you. This is your father's office. You can horse sound all you like, and maybe you'll get hawled out, maybe ever docked a little, but you won't be fired. You don't even have to be any good, but still the place will probably be yours some day you want it. Me, I'm just a poor girl trying to get along. I'm got to be careful."

Borscht. You could quit tomorrow and marry some rich grade day after."

Helieve it or not, sonny, I don't want to marry some rich gure.

I want to keep my job and get ahead in it. I'm good, you know.

I'm damn good. If I get the breaks, I can go lar."

"Okay. Fine. So where do I come in?"

"Oh, Jim, go away now before somebody comes. You're being before. Call me up at home tonight, after you've had a chance to thirds."

He trood up. "Maybe I will," he said, "and maybe I won the tried to slam the door behind him, but you couldn't slam these heavy doors.

She could go to hell. He had planned to ask her to get another to the world with him and Wick tonight. Now she could got the wouldn't be any good for a date-like that, anyhous tions from high hard in idea of re Man tanadady he'd been travelling m units his recould the seen him. But Wick wouldn't be impressed. He just winderstand her.

the passed Stillman coming down the hall. The old govern Man with the Sling layout fluttering from his hand reged banner, its bottom punched full of holes. His face was bed and he was talking to himself.

Hi," Jim said.

Stillman stopped and looked at him as if he were trying in thember who he was. "Oh," he said. "Yes. Jim. I think their" ant you to paste up some ads." He never admitted that he diaself wanted anyone to do anything. It was always "theys" waved the layout under Jum's nose. "Just look at this. A work, and look what they do to it. Nobody has any respect for anything any more."

Several rooms were empty, their inhabitants on their vacations. in slipped into one and picked up the phone.

Give me an outside wire, please." he said in a deep voice.

quired.

Tim laughed. "You were supposed to think it was Quinlar."

Mr. Quinlan's on vacation. But I'd know your voice anyhow."

You would, huh? Well, listen, Sylvia, you don't know I'm here, okay? If m, -if anybody's looking for me, you think In doing something for Mr. Stillman. If he's looking for me oh hell. I'll only be a minure anyhow. Give me an outside fivire"

While he waited for the number, he sat slown and put his feet. the desk. It was a desk like his father's, only smaller, and sushed to one end of the room to make space for all the other dirnituse. Ouinlan was an account executive. He had an artifial fireplace in his office with two modern love-scats facing such ther at either side of it. Over the fireplace was a finger-painth seching but swirls and blobs of color in a pickled walnut in

One of the second parties sould make out to reveal a complete bar, and new to the parties when Quiplan was there, it was sweam door, by Later at the photograph on Quinlan's dest. All the best constraints on their desks, except Jim's father, who have the calculating on the wall. Quinlan's was of two boys, one in uniform and one a kid about fourteen with big cars. The younger had come to the office one day. He went to Andover and lived with his mother, who was divorced from Quinlan, and called his father by his first name, Phil. Jim looked at the big cared boy in the picture and felt so sorry for him he wanted to cry. But maybe that was crazy. Maybe the kid felt fine. "Hello," he said into the phone. "I'd like to speak to Miss-Gorman." Miss Gorman He didn't know any "Miss Gorman." She came on then. "Hello," he said. "Libby"

There was a pause. 'Hello." She murmured something aways from the phone. "Hello, just a minute."

He should have waited till he got home. He should have called her at her house. He should have thought about it. You couldn't just barge in like this when she was working, after three weeks.

"Hello," she said again. "I was taking dictation from my; father. I'm alone now."

"Oh. I didn't know you knew shorthand."

"Didn't you?"

"No, I didn't."

He began to sweat. Jeez, it was only three weeks. What did he used to say to her when he called her three weeks ago?

"Was there something you wanted?" she asked him.

"Well. Yes, there was. Wick's in town. You remember Wick."
Remember Wick. She had only seen him about twenty times, whenever she came up to Dartmouth, whenever he brought Wicklione for a holiday. "Well, he's in the Coast Guard now and he's got a three-day pass. He thought we might all go out some place tohight, if you could get a girl for him. How about Marge, Nicholas? I think Wick would like Marge."

she said. "I'm busy tonight."

Lincon, Wark a only to town were sorry about Wick. I really am. But I'm get some other girl to get him a date. I'm sureeilent for a second. "Why don't you try me again some then you have a friend to entertain?" The receiver made a k in his ear.

Jim shoved the telephone away and took his feet off the detail hadam, he thought. Goddam. Everything was loused to What was he going to tell Wick now? He lived thirty mile word New York City, but he couldn't get any girls-he couldn't a date for his roommate who was on a three-day pass. God If it hadn't been for his father shooting his mouth in but Hallie . . . The son of a bitch, he thought.

He pushed himself out of the chair and tore open the dear. Hallie was dictating to a stenographer. "You can come back? bes," he said. "I have some urgent business to discuss with this Breed."

That's fine.' Hallie said when the girl had gone. "Thet's reat. Urgent husiness. The story of grapefruit from Burbank Sunkist? What are you trying to do, lim? The whole office? be jumping with this in filteen minutes."

Listen," he said. "Listen. To hell with all that. Let's get servied. I'll quit college and stay on here and you can keep your, You'd need it, anyhow, when I'm drafted."

She leaned back in her chair and looked up at him. "That's til of a proposal, lamb."

icaho was a good camp for the councilors. Once every ceks, after the children had gone home, there was a party councilors and their friends, a swim in the pool and the bokout. If the Rat had had any luck in the market be it thes provided steak. There would be hot dogs first, so sime the steak came around, nobody noticed that the not be the same and the same and the same and the same of the same didn't work out, somehow. Ann thought were being being the was good at things like cookouts. He knew all about about any kind of camping. He was an Eagle Scout didn't work out, somehow. Ann thought everybody was a somehow to him, but he was funny about them.

"hat woman," he said. "What's the matter with her?

per like I'm poison or something."

Wilma? What are you talking about? She was as sweet was an about?

Yeah? Did you hear her keep calling me 'httle boy?"

"Oh, Bill, that's just her way. She talks to everybody likes that, She's sort of 1 don't know—gruff, even to the kids. But who's wonderful when you know her"

"Maybe," I'll said.

They were sitting alone, back from the fire a little. The others were singing the kind of song you sang around a campfire, "Long Long Trail" and "Shine on, Harvest Moon," and "In the Even Milma looked broody, Anny thought, the way a fire makes you.

it's not the same," Bill said

She looked at him. He had his knees up, his aims across them and his chin down on his knees. In the firelight the big bones of his face were softened and his cheeks looked mooth and full. Bill, she thought, and wanted to stroke his cheek, but it was made a thing she would ever do with Bill. What he had said seemed to make no sense and she asked him:

What isn't the same?" But she knew what he meant.

"Nothing," he said. "I don't know. Us."

"(Js!"

This was supposed to be such a good summer. All we do as a supposed to be such a good summer. All we do as werelways did."

The like this. Not as if—I don't know. It isn't only that."

He rubbis his still afford allege has and . The finests you have the old the finests you

The faid por wait for her to tell him. "When you were before, you didn't know I was living."

The laughed a little. "Gerhardt? Don't he a dope, Bills and lonely. I just try to be nice to him, that a

You told me he asked you for a date."

Well, there's no law against that." She lay back in the man with her arms under her head and her knees up. If she'd have lart on, she'd have had to keep her legs flat on the ground; here was really no sense to skirts when you thought of it. They suight to change the fashion. "Anybody can ask me for a day," the said. She felt better now, not like before. This was familian, it had nothing to do with the strangeness that was in her this summer, the fears that woke her at night. Bill had always worried about other fellows. "I didn't go with him, did I?"

You didn't tell him you were going steady, either. He'll ask

"I tried to tell him. He didn't understand it. He thought's meant I was engaged, and when I said I wasn't, he didn't get it. After all, he's a foreigner. But even if he asks me again, I don't have to go, do 1? He'll catch on after a while."

Bill picked up a twig and began breaking it up between his hands "I wish we were engaged." he sand. "I could go in the farmy now. I could-enlist, and they'd take me. But if I wanted to get engaged, everybody'd laugh."

Ann said nothing. After a few minutes, Bill said, "I thought were going to have a good summer anyhow."

"We are," Ann said. "Why shouldn't we?"

Several of the councilors didn't have guests at the next cooking.

Wilma, for one.

"Is your little hoy coming to the shindig tonight?" she saled

"I'm not sure."

Well, if he doesn't, how about spending the night with and

My roomers and to Manue for a week and her emply bed looks kind of the middle of the dight.

a most read with a girl who was a dental hygienist. They had a most recom apartment near the school where Wilma taught in the pieter. "She looks and acts like a bird brain," Wilma had sold ann, "but she's one smart little cookie. She can do anything frein speaking three languages to baking a chocolate cake like in the picture books. Now she wants to go and waste all that taleft on the silly goop she works for " my chin and he has a hald spot and one of those toothbrush moustaches. Even when he's away from his office, he smell like that stuff they use to swah out a cavity just before they fill it.

"You mean she's going to marry him?"

Ann thought she had a may velous sense of humor. She was a wonderful person all around. It was pretty flattering that she liked Ann enough to want her to spend the night with her. She could have Bull to another cookout, but Wilma might not be alone again.

It was too hot for activities that afternoon. As soon as rest hour was over, Wilma and Ann herded the children into the pool and kept them going in and out until the busses came.

Gerhardt had made fine progress with them. Almost all of them could swim now except one fat little girl, short for her age, with pudgy arms and legs that she flailed frantically the minute she gut in the water.

"She should float so easily, the way she is made," Gerhardt, said. "Lake a cork. But she is so frightened. I speak to her and tell her liwill not let her go, and still she has this fear." He spokes to Wilma, looking at the child who sat away from the pool now, hugging her knees and shivering in the ninety degree heat. "It, would be better, I think, not to force this any more. Perhaps laters, on, when she is a little older—"

"Ha!" Wilma said. "Don't be silly. Her mother says she's got of to learn how to swim before the summer's over. She says all the other children in the group are learning, and her child is just?

sittle Mille would be swimming with the b clore the end of camp. So she'd better be swimming Perhaps Mr. Ratman will have to say to the mother has changed his mind. I do not think the little girl can le

"The Rat never changes his mind." She called across the

the child. "Hey, Millie, come here a minute."

Her name is not Millie," Gerhardt said. "It is Barbara."

T know. This is one of our toolish American jokes. We Sertain people Mac or Bub of Susie or Millie, even when it is their name, and we find it amusing."

Ann swam slowly down the pool toward them. Wilms had that sort of jeering note in her voice that she often had when the talked to Gerhardt. There was some antagonism between them that Ann did not understand.

"Yes," Gerhardt said. "I see."

Ann pulled herself out of the pool and stood with the water dripping from her fuschia bathing suit, watching the little fat girl frotting across to Wilma.

"Hi, Barbara," she said softly. "How's everything?"

The child stopped and looked up at her. She grinned. ann," she said, "you look just like a melting Popsicle."

"Ha!" Wilma said. "Did you hear that? Now who care the can swim or not? I'll bet the silly old so and so who whered wher doesn't even know she has an imagination." The council stretched out her hand to the child. "Come here, butterballs

Barbara smiled at the name and slipped her hand into William The stood with her feet apart, waiting, looking sturdy. Her Though, were shy and wary.

*Do you think you're going to learn to swim soon?

riked her.

The child lowered her head. "I don't know," she much Well, I think you are. You look just about on the learning the second of the sec

there's head that up, and her hand tightened arming

"I don't want him to let me go. Pll sink.".

(Not until you say so. Not until you say so.

daddy said they threw him in the water and he had the men."

That much rather you didn't learn to swim at all than have to frighten you. I'll tell you what—" Wilma got to her feet, still bedding the child's hand. "You take me in the pool and shows are what you want me to do to help you, and I'll do it, exactly a you say."

Ann sat next to Gerhardt at the edge of the pool. "Isn't she marvelous?" she will

"She is a most temarkable woman."

When't sure you thought so. Sometimes you don't seem to like her very much.

Many things about her I do like very much. It is she who don't see why."

"He smiled. "I am very glad. I was afraid you understood quite" well why someone would not like me."

for the pool, Wilma had her arm around the fat little gigin a stotifach while the child kicked and splashed?

Don't work so hard," Wilma said. "I'm holding you. Take.

Harbara's frantic gyrations slowed a little. "Is that better?

promised you I wouldn't. I never break a promise. You're dong fine. Feel how light you are?"

Thu could hold me by my barhing suit now. But don't let go."

Catherite went to work with some of the other children, and because back to sit with Ann while they practiced what he had.

the be so atraid

"A con't know," Ann said. "Kids are funny. My brod be scared every time my mother went out that she wa fining back again. He used to vell and scream when Lett. I was only about four, but I remember it."

"And you were not afraid?"

I don't think so, 'Ann said, "I guess I knew she'd be back." Wilma lifted Barbara out of the pool and hoisted herself in beside her. "That was wonderful," Wilma said. "I'm going to wall up your mother and tell her how well you're doing."

The child's eyes shone. "Yes, and tell her maybe tomorrow.

11 let you let co."

She ran back to the grass where some of the other children were playing, and Wilma lay down flat beside the pool. "She'll "wim." she said. "It may take another couple of weeks, but she'll do it."

"I appreciate this," Gerhardt said.

Wilma turned her head toward him. "I'm doing it for the kid. So she doesn't have to have another failure." She looked up at whe sky. "God knows how many she's had already, trying to be Esenat her mother wants

You are very bitter about mothers," Gerhardt said. "They are "not all so bad."

"Oh, sure, I know. M-O-T-H-E-R spells Mother, a boy's best pal. Only when you see what most of 'em do to their kids, even when they mean well . ." She sat up and turned to Asia. "You'd better get back in the pool, Popsicle. They're getting restless."

Ann had a much better time at the cookout that night Ne sine here was part of her life at home. She didn't have to yeary wonder about any of them. There was nobody to goest that everything was changing. When she was with Bill, and kept wenting to be the way she always had been, but sooner its later had to spoil things and she didn't know why,

For the second country sight before, when Bill had taken her to the second dance. He had booked awfully statistically in his beginner jacket, as black as he was from his literated in his beginner jacket, as black as he was from his literated in his property had danced together as they always did, practically as if they were one person. Everything was the same at first ever to where her mother asked her why she didn't circulate at little thance with some of the other boys, and she had to explain all over again that when you were going steady you didn't dance with any other boys.

"That's insane," her mother said. "Even married people dance, with someone besides their own husbands and wives. What is this, some kind of cult of horedom you youngsters are trying

outha

Her lather danced with her once, when the orchestra played a Charleston. "I used to be pretty good at this," he said. "It's funny how all these chings are being revived from my time, the dances and the old songs, as if nobody can think of anything new any more."

He wasn't a bad dancer for a man his age, though Ann thought he looked better doing the thumba than the Charleston.

"I was watching you and Bill danking your version of a foxriot before," he said. "The way you were all but standing still, swaying to the music with your arms around each other, reminded me of the marathon dances they used to have when I was a kid. That was the way the couples danced at the end, batch moving, out on their feet. Sometimes one of the pair would be so exhausted, or even actually askep, that his partner would have to drag him around the floor "We'd see it in the newsreels, somebody collapsing, somebody being carried out on a stretcher;" days of it, weeks, until there was only one couple left."

"It sounds crazy," Ann said.

"It was. We were a crazy bunch." He smiled at her., "I think you kilds were supposed to be our parents, but something got twisted around."

stop and an much. The Charleston was a renuous dance; had been dancing with her mother, came back had never know what to say to your mother," he said. You're always telling me that."

Well, it's so. I don't mean I don't like her or anything the just now she asked me why I did the Charleston design in the twenties.

was I supposed to say to that?"

"I don't know," Ann said. "You certainly seem to have the getting along with people. Wilma, my mother— I shail think by the time a person is out of high school, he ought in know what to say."

He looked down at her without speaking, just shrugging his shoulders a little, and she wished she could take it back. She had never talked to Bill that way before. She didn't know what had got into her. Always before she had been on his side. She matter how she tried the rest of the evening, nothing seemed to right any more.

He wouldn't have enjoyed the cookout anyhow. He wouldn't lave liked the way Gerry hung around her all evening. She couldn't very well tell him not to, because she'd have hurs his seelings. With an American boy, it was different. All she'd have to say was that she was going steady and he'd understand and claim there was nothing personal in it. But Gerry thought as long as you weren't engaged, any fellow had a clear field. She couldn't keep trying to set him straight on it.

"You're not supposed to do this," she said, when he brought for himself, and that means girls too."

He say down beside her with his own plate. He had filled on lot since she had first seen him, and he was as tanned and likely-looking as any of them now. She thought he seemed and the reality too, though she couldn't have said why

"Why should see that take advantage of your sex if you can?"

little state de state charted, but flavored by the outdoors, signed state is divine."

the select at her. "You are charming."

force the felt charming. "I'm afraid you're a wolf," she said She toked at him. "You know what a wolf is?"

only a timid young man who is not sure of bonself at all with an American girl." He laughed. "I think perhaps I would like to be a wolf."

She laughed too. "Some people are sure you are one."

"If I were, I would know how to ask you if I may drive you home tonight. I have my sister's car."

"Oh, I'm so serry" She 'and her hand briefly on his arm and: was startled at the feel of it, hairy and sort of tough, so different from Bill's. "Wilma asked me to spend the night with her."

He stared down at the arm she had touched. His paws worked, as if he were chewing, but she didn't think he was chewing any, more, "Please do not go," he said in a low voice.

"Gee, Gerry, I have to go. I told her I would. Her roommate's away and she's all alone"

"She is surely able to be alone, a great grown woman."

"Yes, but I want to go, Gerry. I mean. I'd love to drive home with you, but maybe we can do that some other time. Tonight I promised Wilma, and I want to go."

"I'do not think you should."

He sounded like Bill, stubborn and unreasonable. She guessed he was pretty crazy about her. But even if there hadn't been Bill, the was too old for her. He was a man. In Europe she guessed giftowers with much older fellows. Often they were regarried at their husbands were more like their fathers. And couldn't see that at all.

"But be silly, Gerry," she said.

in her haunches. She could stay that way for hour hau.

How about a camp song, everybody?" She winked how about, 'We're Going Back to Rapaho?' Mr. ke to to the bout of the book't you lead us?"

The director gave a pleased look around, murmuring of the citil several hands pushed him and there was a chorus of, the Mr. Ratman." Then he got to his feet, still holding his late with a bitten crescent of bread on it. He started to hands, noticed the plate, giggled, and threw it into the hands then frowned.

"Well, all right," he said sternly. "Make it loud and class, how." He lifted one hand and gave them the first note, dragging wout, "We-e-e-'re . . ."

"We're going back to Rapaho," everyone sang heartily, "Back where we belong.

To its hills and water Each son and daughter Raises up this song."

"We're going back to Bapaho; Been away too long. Now the time is nearing To join the cheering Of our happy throng.

"Rapaho-ho-ho! Rapaho-ho-ho! Ra-a-a-apaho!"

The last part was a cheer, and in order to lead it, Mr. R it down on one knee, balled his hands into fists, unit arms violently. Ann followed along with entirusiants. hope to be a second to the second the fire.

The second to the second to the second the second the second to the s hol" she yelled, accentuating each "ho" with the Then she saw Wilma looking at her across the and she grinned back and exaggerated the head be and her voice.

Tapaho!" She laughed. "I thought the Rat was going references not seem to me funny," he said, "to make a joke compone this way."

mice minute she was angry, annoyed with him for being the but then she remembered that after all he couldn't be appeared to understand.

Well," she and "that's American humor. We think its

Then speak like Wilma," he said. Then he laughed, "'Rapahoo' It is very silly. Yet perhaps this is better, this kind of all laughess, than to scott at everything."

Lit's not be philosophical," Ann said. "It's too nice a night."

He laughed again "All right. We will not be philosophical.

Like of the old councilors sked Wilma to sing, and some of the others took it up. Someone velled, "Sing 'Sleepv-Time Gall' Recrybody applicated, and Wilma squatted in front of the fire and regan singing in a low-pitched, husky voice with an insing and whythm.

"Sleepy-time gal, You're tiamin' night into day. . . . "

her looked into the fire as she sang. Once she raised her eyes

Ann whispered to Gerhande

said something, but Ann did not know what it w

The way Wilma book on the charles of the charles of Alia couldn't think of any girl to compare her with the think of any girl to compare her with the thing like any girl Ann had ever heard. She was term after "Sleepv-Time Gal," she sang. "Smoke Gets of the thing late, and then "Balt H'at." Then she got up and said to the thing late, and she came around the fire and took Ann't said, "Come on. Popsicle. Time to go home."

Gerhardt stood up. "Ann," he said, "vou told me I word

Talk about American fellows being persistent, she thought, You must have misunderstood me," she said. "I'm spending the bight with Wilma."

She and Wilma went hand in hand to the parking lot and gentation the five-year-old Chevy coupe that Wilma kept as carefully eleaned and polished as if it were new. Wilma was still humming Bali H'ai, and she did not speak until they were on the road.

"That Weber," she said. "Is he annoying you?"

Ann frowned. "No He's all right."

"I still don't trust him. I don't think you should either "I

"My goodness, why does everyone want to take care of me?" In almost eighteen," Ann said. "Anvhow, I'm not going out lone with him. You forget Bill."

Oh, that little boy," Wilma said "You can't be serious about

"He's older than I am. Three months older."

Wilma laughed. "You're cute," she said. She squeezed Ann's hand and then began to sing again, driving fast along the spead, so fast that Ann, who liked speed, was a little nervous.

"It's all right," Wilma said. "I've never had an acc ident things

"I didn't say anything."

"You don't have to. I can feel your tension." She similar Re handle for more I love to liven.

has to be going with Wilma tonight instead of house has a looke going with Wilma tonight instead of house has a looke going with Wilma tonight instead of house has around again, questioning her mother, and Ann couldn't be her anything had come out about Mrs. Dellett or not while she had decided that it wouldn't because it had nothing to do with Lex, but then she had figured out that Mrs. Dear must be a Communist, and the F.B.I. would have to cheet up on her friendship with Ann's father because he was so close to Lex. Whether or not Mr. Nice had started on it yet, she didn't know. Everybody seemed upset about something. Her father and Im hardly spoke to each other and her mother kept gering headaches. It was retrible not knowing, waiting for something to happen.

Here we are, 'Wilma said "It's a little on the crummy side,"

but there are those who love it.'

The apartment bouse was old and the halls smelled musty, but Wilma's place, one floor up, was like her car, polished clean. The furniture was large and plant, slep covered in fresh-colored striped cotton. Wilm's slept on a studio coach in the livings room. The bedroom, which was fussier than the rest of the aparthment, with a blue ruffied bedspecial and matching lampshades on the dressing table, was given over to her roommate.

it's clean and there's a good bed and a place to hang my hat. I'm satisfied. Go on in and make yourselt comfortable. Peggy's stuff?

should he you all right."

beginn could find was a night gown and a flower-springed beginn coat. She had never worn a night gown in her life, but the part it on. The coat was a little right across the shoulders where left it open.

logical pagamas with a red jacket. She hid highballs ready on a the a plate of crackers

es had a highball. Sometimes their cocktail, good and sweet, but she didn't like t Guor much. She didn't like the way her parents were inking. Her father's eyes got funny after a couple of et her mother talked too fast, and she didn't see wh nted to get like that. She was never going to. But of had to be polite and drink Wilma's highball.

She sat down on the sofa, holding the glass. Now the here she felt a little strange. Wilma looked different die camp clothes, older. It was almost like all the other the artable times when she sat in a room with an adult and iñow what to sav.

Let's have some music." Wilma got up and turned on dio. "WQXR. I don't really like that kind of music, but said background, less distracting than something you can high as stood looking down at Ann on the sofa "You have beautiff es; Ann., I suppose vou've been told that. Don't blush." ighed. "Nothing I say to you should make you blush., Wi ends." She sat down next to Ann and put her hand on the ree, "I'll tell you what your eyes remind me of -- some asone ids I had when I was little. My grandmother rubbed them dress and then picked up a scrap of paper with them to a they were real. She was a good old gal, but she died at ivas ten."

Ann took a little sip of her drink, careful not to men her. She didn't want Wilma to think she was trying to way from her hand. It felt uncomfortably warm through sion nightgown, but she didn't want to hurt Wilma's K One of my grandmothers is still alive; my mother's i said. "She lives in Framington with one of investig right see them Christmas."

ima grinned at her. "What's the matter with what the matter was. She had been a glad she didn't have to go home, and now the tione, in her own room. It was crazy, but she with disetimes. Alolescent, she guessed.

grinned back. "H.," she said, and thought it came a normal.

ha moved away to a corner of the couch. Ann felt bett diately with her knee free. She had been getting a cram now did you like the Rat at the campfire onight?" Wilm Didn't he put on a show? Rapaho-ho-ho." She begin "I thought I'd burst, trying to be serious."

Me too." Ann put her glass down. "I can't finish this, de mind? I'm nor much on drinking." She settled her bere rent rinder her on the sofia. "Gerry didn't get the joke, though te thought it wasn't nice to make fun of the Rat. He certaint best t understand American humor very well."

don't know. He could be right. Maybe the Rat's got ative soul hidden away somewhere. Maybe he isn't just trummy httle guy living off a lot of crummy mothers who can their kids around." She reached for Ann's glass. "Here es you a coke."

The you a cone. mothers always send their kids to came because they can because they thought it would be good for me."

That's what they all tell themselves" Wilma sat cross-legge toor at Ann's feet. "Your mother may be different. S be a wonderful mother," Ann said. "I've never s an marvelous with kids."

Mattet damn radio to another station, will you, And to move," Wilma said. "Or turn it off altogether shough music for one night. 'We're going backs

Rapadia. That is officed, we have the second assessment of the second of Later, lying in hed in Peggy's room, Ann tried to remember the night together without any confidences.

Later, lying in hed in Peggy's room, Ann tried to remember the had said, but there was too much to remember the high heat he had said, but there was too much to remember the high heat half a highball, because she had felt sort of tot the heat half a highball, because she had felt sort of tot the heat half a highball, because she had felt sort of tot the heat half a highball, because she had saked her to the highbalt herself, she hadn't known what to say. You never the heat anyone asked you that. But then Wilma had beguing the heat you knew it Ann was telling her things she had never paid in yone in her life.

She couldn't remember everything. Wilma had said either, Duly that she hadn't had a happy childhood and that she didn't set along well with men because she was too rail. She was lonely, han thought. It was funny to think of anyone that wonderful living to be lonely. She spent most of her time with children. She insisted that she didn't especially like children, just felt sorry for them, but Ann was sure she really did like them of the souldn't have been so good with them.

"If Peggy marries her dentist," she had caid, "[.] probably start which I'm alone here at night."

She made it seem as if it were all a joke, but Ann knew it

"I think you and I could be great friends, Ann," she said. "We have a lot to give each other. Maybe you can help me to believe in the something again, and I can help you not to believe in the analysis."

of something of the state of the words between us. I don't want anything the state of the state in the words made it seem worse, more real. She was even to the way that she had talked about her feeling for him. A feeling changed when you talked about it. It wasn't only between the people any more. Something went out of it. That was what her resider and most other adults didn't seem to understand—that had to keep some things just for yourself, or you'd sport them.

at the time, had felt a need to tell her. They had been sitting in the dark with the radio tuned down low and everything electricity. A kind of acrow for Wilma had come over her, and the had wanted to help her to be happy. They had seemed very class, sitting there together. All at once Ann had wanted Wilma to know everything about her.

"You don't really care for Bill," Wilma had said. "You's just used to him his so easy to be fooled. Ann, into lifetimes misery. There can be so much ugliness in a man's love, so much barabness and crucity."

"Bill's not like that," Ann said.

He's only a boy now, a child. They change. 'Each one wills' the thing he loves.' That was wratten by a man about mental memors are tender and protective toward what they love, but men can be brutal. In some circles they beat their women. In the statistic protective in the same of the same a kiss, some with a sword, but it's all the same."

And thought of her father—of her father and Mrs Deller. She Hought of her mother. When you said, "it would kill her the knew," you didn't mean it literally. She didn't suppose the price. Wilma was talking about meant it literally either a back out kills the thing he loves sterybody's like that," she said. "Ne all men."

Liste to, her back was so straight and strong. So that one drink, and then she had sat there with a seed and her hands on her knees, talking in her deep, just sitting there and talking and listening to Animad been as though everybody else in the world were a Don't think I'm down on love," she had said. "Nothing worth living for. Most people don't know how to love, they don't love enough."

My aunt said something like that once."

Ann didn't know how long they had talked. Wilms inched her off to bed finally. She had kissed her goodalists inch surprised Ann, because she wouldn't have thought Wilms the kissing kind. And now here she was in this bed that as softer than her own but a little lumpy, and she couldn't she felt all keyed up and at the same time depressed. This is adolescence too, she supposed—what her mother called the land depressive teens. If you understood about its just being the age, it wasn't supposed to bother you so much.

finally she did fall asleep, and awoke with the feeling that the being strangled. She tried to sit up and couldn't, and the realized that Wilma was lying next to her on the bed with:

Heyl" Ann said.

Wilma stirred and moved her arms and Ann wrenched have any and out of the bed. She stood in the middle of the half asleep, and said, "Hey!" again, angrily.

Wilma sat up. "Ann," she said, "what's the matter?" It's all right. You must have had a night were yelling your head off and I came in to quiet you fell askep here." She held out her hand. "It's all the way on back."

looked around the dark room. "I can't deep siny way. We'll go right to camp together, see sounded annoyed, but then she got out of the begot gentler. "Go on back to sleep," she said. "I'm street you."

then Ann got home the next evening. Mr. Nye was in a gain with her mother. The house was quiet. Lex he have been for a few days and Aunt Marcia, Rena to was at the handresser.

paing if it looked had and I said it did." Rena laughed. "Signature that Said she was glad to find her an honest woman." Ann asked automatically.

five minutes ago and wanted to knew if you was home. He call at the sound to call back later."

Me's Austrian." Ann said. "I've told you that a million time."
What's the difference? Austrian -- French. They're all full files."

took a long shower and got into clean shorts and strates shirt. Her hair looked straggly- it always did unlessed it every night—so she brushed it back straight rate horsefall, and tied a ribbon around it. She felt so clean and that she didn't even want to powder her nose. She just my fittle lipstick.

she heard her aunt come in she ran downstairs. "His annt had on a pink cotton dress. It wasn't exactly the rions anyone her size, but it looked good with her eyes the hair looked fine. You wouldn't have any way now the it was dyed, except that most people that age didn't black hair.

she said. "They did a good job."

Her auet spilede

Pour know. I just stayed at this girl's apartment was raise and the stayed at this girl's apartment was not very exciting."

"Where's your mother?"

Mr. Nye's here."

Oh, Lord. Again?" She started to go upstairs and then the found. "Want to come up with me for a few minutes?", Okay," Ann said.

Her aunt's room was always terribly sloppy, much worse that ten had ever kept her room. Rena straightened up some et it when she cleaned it, but nobody could really do it all. She always had stuff all over the bed, books and stockings and packaged of characters and those little extra pillows that she called baby pillows. What wasn't on the bed was on the diesser. Half the time the didn't even bother putting her jewelry away, and some of was really good, stuff her second husband had given her said Aunt Marcia a lot of almony. Aunt Marcia always said the had taken all she could get so he'd have less to spendron figuor.

Ann couldn't see any place to sit. "Just shove that book on the floor and sit on the chair," her aunt said. "It's a lousy book shaway—all full of rotten, weak, hopeless people in a world

Sinar's going to pot."

There was something to be said, Ann thought, for a robbit where you could throw things on the floor. She sat in the chair and her aunt made room on the bed and lay down. Ann's mother and Aunt Marcia threw herself whole-heartedly into everything even resting.

"I like to read about nice people, don't you?" her aunit so think most people are nice, if you can peol off enough; we's light down to it. And I don't believe everybody's brooding and paining about the state of the world either. The world toes worse states and got out of it. I think most deople is the

on a synthesis deal your fiven when bombs fall on shows the could remember waking up of the war some shows the could remember waking up of the war some in the palamas, listening to Chamberlain. Could be she couldn't remember what he had said. She didn't ever at the time that it was Chamberlain.

shaper on, when it seemed as though the German bombers and around the house that come, they had had buckets of said around the house that a stirrup pump to put out fires. Her father had fixed up a shelter out of an old table, and they had all procured getting tiples it in a hurry. She and Jim had huddled together and giegled, but Jim had been trembling too. After a while, where it didn't seem as though the Germans were going to come after all at had become as much if I game to him as it was to here. Their father was an air raid warden, and every time they say had in his helmer they had to laugh at how furny he looked.

Ann smiled. "Do you think Gromvko's nice?"

Maybe he's chairming dinner company. I don't know. He stands for something we have and know is wrong, but he probably thinks it's right. That makes him more a fool than a rogue, doesn't it?"

Yes, I guess so." Alm thought a minute. "You mean if some is body does something had because he thinks it's right, he up to really a bad person?"

Het aunt turned on her side and looked at her. "Is that a new least to you?" She rea hed for a organite and le it and them held in the corner of her mouth, putting at it without taking it with "What do you kids talk about, anyway? When you get together, I mean. What do you discuss?"

Rike twondered how anybody was supposed to answer questions. Rike the was like asking, What do you discuss? It was like asking, What do you rould recite it like something in tree too much. I guess we thought if we kept of find the answer to everything.

wondered if she was listening for Lex, who had drived wondered if she was listening for Lex, who had drived wertible into New York and would be back some time too was Jim's car, though He always raced the motor for a management of the stopped, to fill the line with gas or something. "I'll tell you," her aunt went on. "Sometimes it's as danged to be a tool as a rogue."

The telephone rang, and Rena yelled up to Ann that the France was on the wire

You can take it here if it isn't private," her aunt said.

Ann would rather have taken it downstries, but she could be went and sat on the chaise, sinking further back that a expected into more of her aunt's haby pillows, so that the conference fell into an awkward position almost under her characters.

Ann?" he said. "Gerry here." It sounded so funny, the Amer in nickname and the foreign expression. "What has happened by were you not at camp? Wilma said you were not well."

Then why—? No. Please." He paused and then added to be the would like very much to see you tonight. May the me?"

She didn't want to see him. She didn't want to see him ar

If you have a date." Gerhardt said, "I rould come before, if you wish. Any time you say "

"My goodness," she said, "it thust be important." When don't answer, she said, "I can't make it tonight. I'll so tono tomorrow."

she pulled herself up out of the chaise to pur the pur table, and saw that her aunt was warshing per rots / Complete Compl

Austrian You tell his Austrian. You tell his a per you mention him."

arted down at the horder of the blue rug, where it is at the geometric pattern a certain way you could see the atting up to beg. "Did you ever hear the saying, 'each man's thing he loves?"

sounds familiar. Why?"

h I don't know. I read it somewhere, and I was wondering it, that's all."

suppose it's true in a way," her aunt said. "If you love the said in the said

Man looked up at her "Do you think men do it more than

Do wha:

Kill the thing they love?"

We're stuck with them." Her face sobered and she raised be said on her elbows. The flesh strained up over the low next her dress, bluish-white against the tan of her face and throat something wrong, "kid." Something with you and Bill, of straining." I'm a good listener."

the got up. "Of course not. Everything's fine," she said the I heard Jim come in. I guess I'll go see what he's doing the closed the door behind her and went into the bathroom as disaste of water. From the window she could see Jim in the live of water by the window she could see Jim in the live of the changed out of his city clother was using the hose on the early little while turning it on himself.

when he'd done it last. Not this summer. She hadded to him wipe his car off this summer, though he used to do they all laughed at him. It was good to see him out they. She had a feeling that she wanted to run down.

1 199]

and talk to him. But the dide to the light was the you

And speed to the property and her proper came and the property of the property

Stie kissed her mother, who patted her cheek-she always and the when she hadn't seen Ann in a while--and asked her home.

Did you have a good time?"

It was okay."

She followed her mother into her room. It was as near as farcia's was untidy. If you asked her where anything was, she would tell you exactly. "In the back right hand corner of the recond drawer." If anyone had taken it or anything and it wasn't there, she would have a fir. Ann wondered how she and Anna Marcia ever could have lived together. But maybe they had been different then, when they were young "Mother, did I ever have nightmares?" Ann asked. "Did I Nightmares? No. No. not you. Jim was the one. He used to be the for me at all hours." She sat down and stared out the coindow, "What makes you ask that?"

Oh, just something with one of the little kids at camp."

She saw that her mother was not listening. She was sitting with one hand on the windowsill and the other fumbling in the appocket of her dress for a cigarette, and Ann nonced now that there face was pale. Something had happened.

What did he want?" Ann asked.

:"Who?"

"Mr. Nye. Why does he keep coming?"

She really did not expect an answer. She thought her make would put her off some way. But she didn't. All at once it was if they were two women.

atter said in a low voice. "He seems to eming a could tell him, something an historic rying to wear me down. If I could be sellett, Ann thought. Mr. Nye thought her mother knew Dellett and her father, and was trying to make the Mooner or later her mother would understand what he was at. Ann wanted to say something or do something, but the mon't know what. She didn't know how to nelp her mothers Stir had never had to help her before.

Griess I'll go out for a while,' she mumbled, and escaped down the stairs. Rena saw her go and called to her not to go far ? because dinner would be ready in a few minutes. As she reached the front walk, Jim came from the driveway, his hair plastered if wet against his head and drops of water glistening on his shoul-? ders.

"Where's daddy?" she asked him.

He didn't come home with me. He's working tonight"

"Does mother know?"

"Fruess so. He must have called her. Why?"

She didn't know why, only that she wanted her father homes she wanted her father, and mother together. She wished she could talk to Jim, but she couldn't. If what she had told himthat night about Mrs. Dellett was what was wrong between him; and their father now, she would only make it worse.

No reason," she said.

He give a sudden lunge, and put his cold, wer hand down the back of her neck. She squealed and struggled to get free, but he held her, laughing, and in a minute she began to giggle.

it, Jim!" she gasped. "Jimme, stop!"

threnie, stop!" he echoed, his voice pitched high and quar-long time since he had teased her. She had always hand Sometimes she had actually cried with vexation, despinisher self for doing it, even though that always stopped him;" the crying new, but it wasn't because the was annoyed.

ghe," she told hime didn't say anything for a minute. "Okay," I ast night. Tonight, Look, Ann, are we still going Because if we're not--"

What makes you think we're not? Just because I Mut you get all-" isn't tun., lims all fouled up." "It isn't that," he interrupted. "I don't know, Eve

Don't be silly," she said

But it was true. Everything did seem all fouled up.

Einner parties were bad enough in the winter. Zelda thouse the the summer, they were an abomination. It was oleasant on he huge, screened in terrace with its view of the gardens: there has a nice breeze. But in the soft, lethargic air, dinner to inter was too much of an effort.

The trouble was, really, that she had had only one cocking selorehand. Dan Partridge had made some timey frozen dail biris, assuming that everyone would like them (or not caring & hey didn't) but Zelda couldn't stand rum, and nothing else had been offered. The Partridges were notably stingy with these, hour, though they were certainly lavish in other ways. Just one; those quirks. If you were to let such things annoy you wouldn't see anybody.

Anyway, had she had her customary two drinks—or three. there was one of those long stretches before you finally sat a eat—she'd have been all right now. Everyone seemed chare to her after a touple of cocktails, and she was charming at least she felt charming, which served the same is I didn't catch your name," the man on her left said. fort, with a heavy red face and graying hair. Zelda dis wher his name either, but she knew he was on a sthange with Dan. He stood out this much for

[202]

was, and pointed out Tony acte of the table. The man sat with a thrimp thing ork, as if trying to decide whether he had said end in the right to ear it, and then asked her how she knew the usual thing," she said. "We met them at someone the up here."

nodded as though satisfied, and pupped the shirms inid. mouth. Zelda looked at Dorothy Partridge at one end of the e and Dan at the other and wondered how, actually, she did them. She knew how she had met them, but that was not same thing. How had they ever come to be what was loosely known as friends?

Now that she in right about it, it struck her that she did not eticularly like either one of them. Why do we see them? she Minisht. Or any of the other couples that hore us? You go anght up in it somehow. You met a couple somewhere, an woman called up later and asked you for donner or the ev time, and you went. There was no way out of it, really, if she was persistent enough, because you could not keep on saying yo were busy on every evening she mentioned. Then you had have them, and there you were. If you really couldn't stand their really you could just not reciprocate, of course. But that was always Commortable. Sooner or later you would be sure to find yoursel in next to them at a dinner party.

wile she was thinking all this, Zelda was at the same time to the red-faced man. It was not difficult. He would et In the ten see that then ask her if she didn't think it had been summer, or if she had seen Dan's flowers, or if she likes in the suburbs in the winter. Later she heard him talking intelligently to another man about politics, and she would whether it was her fault for not drawing him out, in he was one of those men who still thought women didney

The man on her prior and cornell addition the him is all the bear of the second all over Westbester. He and his second there up, in a large house near the Sound. They had the children or maybe it was five.

Mrs. Halliday," he said, "you look younger every times.

On Lord! she thought. She looked at Dorothy, who was a line happily about her new maid who went off on periodical bases but was such a marvelous cook they all pretended not to protect. You could get an idea of what your friends thought for by whom they put you next to at dinner. It Dorothy thanking the deserved these two, she must either dislike her or think the lines as dull as they were.

How old are your children?" Evan asked her When she told him, he shook his head. "I can't believe it. That's the great hing, of course, about having your children when you're young.

She said. "I never thought of it in quite that way."

Take me, now." he said. "My youngest is only five. By the date she's in college, I'll be an old man of sixty. Of course these these ways even sixty isn't so old."

The maid passed a platter of cold hoiled lobsters, lying red and impesisting among the watercress, their sayage claws futile,

What strange things we eat." Zelda said. "I wonder who first had the courage to try anything as dreadful-looking as a louster." Evan laughed a little uncertainly. "Look out," he said. "You'll poil my appetite."

She thought of what he had said before, that even sixty wather old any more. He would probably be turning up next to have dinner parties for another fifteen or twenty years. There was brought on be said for the times when people past fitty had any the fire.

How are the schools in your community, Mrs. Hallicher, 1

kett her

Very Other progressive, I think, for public

His made and siid down his nose a little, and he made a posterior though trying to coax them back, and then pushed them had place with his tinger. He had a singularly fleshy nose in contract with his long, bony face.

"West do you mean, progressive?" he asked whe through with them, and so was she. All the years of PTA meetings were over. She supposed some day she would missible to but it was too soon for that on, less strict discipline, more attention to the individual?

she said, "more free expression . ."

Byan pushed a lobster cow around on his plate. "How free do you think expression should be?" he asked her.

All at once he was not just a stupid little min mouthing cliches at the dinner table. His wiree had grown tight and quiet, something Zelda had heard came back to her taintly now, and she felt her blood stir, released from the touri iquer of boredom.

She looked at him and laughed. "I used to be reabout a school; in the city, a private school, where the children threw bread; at each other at the louch table and nobody stopped them for fear of repressing them too much. I don't think it should be that free."

He brushed this aside. "What about the "thers? Do you;

Within certain limits, yes. After all, in the public schools there's a syllabus to cover. We can't have a teacher indulging a which for teaching Etruscan history, say, when there's barely time to cover the prescribed history course. But if it's something extragations continued to it."

The wes, of course. But what it they were to try to ship in a little communism?" He split a lobster claw with a flutcracker. The consider explosion of sound concided with the last word. "Last wouldn't want that, would you?"

else was listening to them. All arou I the table little pockets of rule and phother that have

A have to know what you mean by 'slip in,' ' she is the mean suggest it's the hope of the world, or discussion attribute."

The side of his mouth that was toward her curved upward his smile. "Those are just words," he said. "I'm a simple his

I know is that I want my children to learn democration of the communists. He gave her an odd side ince. "Maybe you feel differently."

A stifled feeling seized her. She felt cold, and then angry is trying clumsily to trap her into an argument, for no purpose that she could imagine except to find our whether she would give "right" answers. Gestapo. Politburo. If she were a teacher public figure, would she speak out now? It frightened has think that she might not.

Maybe I do," she said, as quietly as she could. "Maybe I think they're old enough they ought to hear all about community and about it, listen to the claims and promises of community. They can't fight something they know they world unless they know why communists think it is." We world unless they know why communists think it is." We world unless they know why communists think it is." We her directly. His ear was near her mouth. She felt as thought were making a speech into a inicrophone. "Flave you can't John Stuart Mill's 'On Liberty?"

"I told you," he said. "I'm a simple man."

This is a simple idea. Mill thought it was important to the arguments of those whose ideas were opposed to constitute from time to time we would be forced to reexamine the output own principles."

No real American has to re-examine democracy, Maria

We know it's good."

There was a subtle accent on the pronoun.

sant have to be atraid to listen to some L'it do we?"

waitress brought finger bowls. Evan dapped into his della and patted his moist fingers against his lips. His hand and fleshy, matched his nose.

afraid of anything or anyone that threatens American he said. "I want them out of the way. I don't want to encued to them."

Zelda did not need the finger bowl. She had scarcely touched Mer Lobster. "On the other hand, I'm not at all alraid of beings exercised to them," she said. "They can't infect me or my family? I don't believe they can intect any noticeable portion of our city series. Not as long as we don't pull down any Iron Curtain, and if we feared a comparison between their system and ours. Let them fear it. I welcome it " She gave him a bland smile, hoping could see it out of the corner of his eye "Apparently I and firmer in the faith than you are, Mr. Evan."

If she had made him angry, he did not show it. He sat bec its his chair, his napkin had neaths across his knees.

The not willing to take chances with the future of my country List for getting rid of whatever may person the minds of its people ple particularly its children. Get rid of them all, I say, whatever inct reuly American. Teachers, movies, books. "

Books." Zelda repeated "What would you do with the books

she did not wait for him to enswer, but turned and negan talliture animatedly to the little red faced man about the advanliving in the suburbs despite the evils of commuting

Design table topic No. 97, for city visitors. He and some other private citizens in his town had chanselves into a vigilante committee to investigate comthe change into a vigilante community schools. They had demanded what specific charges Zeide the of two tenchers—on what specific charges Ze could not remember him the diserve back, and taken officially can be the choof libraries in investigation of the half turned up only one that had any dangerous and the a book written by an avowed communist. It was in the light tomantic story about a hero of the Revolutionary Was Leida recalled that for almost a year, Mr. Evan and half in and recalled that for almost a year, Mr. Evan and ma wighteness had threatened and frightened the community, until the that and the Board of Education held an open meeting in the own hall at which the charges were all publicly disproved and the left-appointed committee virtually thrown out of courses.

But Mr. Evan was still trying. If the occasion ever arose, Zede was sure he would denounce her as a communist. He had to descendence somebody. A frightened man can be dangerous, she hought.

Zelda went out to the powder room to repair her make-up. A mirror over the dressing table covered all one wall, reflecting old mermaids swimming in a black sea of wallpaper. The toiler researched behind a partition. Zelda remembered something for grandtather had said one-at least thirty five years ago it minut have been, on one of his rate visits to Framington from his mid-western farm.

Toilets in the house!" he had muttered. "Disgusting!"

Telda examined herself in the mirror and decided she looked like hell. She had started off all right. Even Ann, who seldon the her a compliment, had said she looked nice. But this was that awful zero hour when danner was over and the cockenity and worn off and you wondered how you could possibly are hirough another two or three hours. You looked and felt are hirough another two or three hours. You looked and felt are hourd been up all night, though it was only about 9.30, and you didn't think you could utter another civil word to anybody. If you had had anything on your mind before you came, this would be time when it seemed least likely ever to turn our will be all night, though she'd have liked to try it. When made her this retardould come here this evening and face all these are supplied and talk, when her schole life was in talk when her schole life was

"Paragoning some of them my gardens by moonlight," he said.

"Day want to come?"

ight. The last thing she wanted to do was see them again in the dark. But she said she'd love to. It would be interesting, she'd thought to keep track of all the hours she spent doing things she didn't want to do because someone else would be hurt or uncomfortable or annoyed if she refused

Dan had snared about half the guests. The others, including Tony, had got up canasta and bridge games and were set apart at tables in the library. Teny liked bridge and was an expert player, but Zeida was no good at any kind of cards. She could never remember what had been played, and it didn't seem insportant enough to her to make the effort. It was one of the things on which she and Tony did not see eye to eye.

"My idea of a game," she had told him one, "is something where everybody laughs and has fue. If I'm going to concentrate and worry and get all worked up, it isn't going to be for diversion."

"But what's the fun if it's so easy that it requires no skill?"
Where's the challenge?"

den't see why everything has to be a challenge."

"Then there's no argument, is there, Babe? It's a matter of temperament," he had said. "You stick to Slap-Jack if you want:

almost made me a nervous wreck. I'd wast trembing for the last to be turned up, and when it was I'd sit there paralyzed white allily slammed his hand down on it so hard the table jumps of That was a terrible game. Lake waiting for somebody to least six at you and yell 'Bool'" laughed until the tears came. He to 'n't often laugh'

the life temporer—jun—Fow city see

Look at this delphinium. Look at the color of it in the aght," Dan was saying. "Did you ever see anything like."

They all murmured that they never had. Corey Windows up behind Zelda and whispered, "This is Dan's substrates. Every time he sees a woman he'd like to sleep with somes out here and plants a flower instead."

Than, a year or two older than Zelda. Like many doctors, he had a hawdy tongue, and sometimes he carried it too far. He had not patients because of it. One woman had said of him that he had no bedside manner; he crawled right in. The quip went the arounds and at least one nervous husband insisted that his right had another doctor.

Zelda knew there was no harm in him. She understood him and liked him and thought he was a fine physician. He had him wife and only child in an automobile accident ten years because. She thought he had a right to be hawdy if he felt like at "Why flowers?" she asked him now. "What's the matter with corothy?"

He put his arm around her. "Frigid," he said.

"How do you know?"

He shrugged. "Any woman who talks that much has to the can't have any energy lest for anything else. Besides are college graduate."

"What on earth has that to do with 112"

"Everything," he said. "Didn't you know that? The discation a woman has, the worse she is in bed."

Zelda laughed. "Corey, you're an ichot. Come along, a Alleright. But what I just told you is a scientific factor and you the statistics. College women.

UĎ.

description his arm and they walked some as the throws of tree roses to join the others. She thought of chideon back in Framington. He had died twenty years a lifty-six, so that he must have been about Corey's as the was a child. She could see him clearly, coming into her obin with the little limp he had from the Spanish-American with his hair gray and his tace lined and reassuringly kindly. It is trapossible to imagine him with his arm around a woman declaring the effect of education on sexual response. Certaining them. He had been an aging man.

there's never been a generation that stayed young as long as pure, she said to Corey, "Tony's always saving that, and its tries. Maybe that's what's wrong with us"

That's wrong with its?" (anc) said. "I think we're wonders tan was digging up a plant as they approached. He had taken of the jacket and tolled up has sleeves, and while he dug someoned being a flashlight to juginent the light from the moon.

"No trouble at all," he was saying "They're too thick in here-small, dark woman whom Zelda did not recognize was analing near him, puffing nervously at a cigarette. "I don't feel train, though, about having you do it at this hear, in your good trains. I'm not even sure it will take on my terrace. I only have this earth, you know. And it might not last until I get back to the form."

will be fine," Dan said. "I'll just wrap it in newspaper and the back of your car, and when you get home you stick."

The fine press it down firmly, soak it with water, and cover it will be fine. Nothing kills these babies."

don't think it could wait until morning?" tile woman come. Id put it right in as soon as you get home. o grass with her heef. That live dandy the sale mides her breath. to the state of the state of the plant and went of the the guests, released, began drifting back to the house, and esiled to Corey that he was wanted on the telephone.

The woman from town walked along with Zelda. Want that damn plant," she said. "I just said to be polited At would look beautiful on my terrace, and the first things know he was digging it up for me. I've got to out it in; tolk squise they're coming to a cocktail party I'm giving next Sunday and that's the first thing Dan will look for." She looked at Zehra and laughed. "I hope you're not one of his spies."

"No, I'm on your side." Zelda said "I suppose we were introriduced, but names and faces always become a blur to me as a serty like this. I'm Zelda Halliday"

*For goodness sake! Marcia's sister?"

"Yes. Are you a friend of Marcia's?"

The other woman grasped Zelda's arm. Zelda could feel the gips of her long nails. "I'm Lex's cousin, Paula Thayer Marcia's mentioned me, hasn't she? My dear, we must sit down some-Swhere and talk. This is the most marvelous coincidence." She Smoked around the guiden "There's a beach. Come on. Nobody Mill miss us".

Zelda followed her. She could not place her for a moment though she knew she had heard the name, but by the time they Seesched the bench she had remembered. Paula Thayer. She was the woman who had telephoned Marcia weeks ago and told her that she had been questioned by the F.B.I. about Nancy Deller.

"Marcia said she was going to call me," Paula Thayer said * they sat down. "What's happened to her Is she still with you!"

Marcia was always saving she was going to call people and manen never doing it. So was Zelda, but for a different section. Zelda knew when she said it that she would not call; sie said ineant to be pleasant. But Maicia loved people. She was thinke friends with everyone she met. The trouble was the ikely to forget them an hour later.

"She tell have wide said," but she really hasn't had a minute to hereast vaguely, You know Marcia."

The other woman laughed. She laughed trequesting their coarsely, Zelda thought, although her voice, when she was quite soft. "From what I've heard, it's my dear, could who's keeping her busy."

sode did not answer. She had thought, during the plant episode dias she might like this woman, but she had changed her mind; in the dark garden she could see dimly a short, sharp nose, and a prominent chin, a witch's profile. The eyes, she was sure, were gleaming. Why don't I go away? she thought. Haven't I heard enough questions about Lex?

"Is it true they're going to be married again?" Paula Thayer

"I'm sure I don't know You'll have to ask Marcia."

"You think I'm snooping. She laughed. "Well, I am, of course. Why shouldn't I' has is my cousin. Everybody keeps asking me and I don't know a thing more than anyone else. It's maddening. But if you won't tell me anything, you won't

She was so open about it that Zelda was a little disarmed, "There's really nothing to tell. Lex is around a good deal, but he's my husband's closest friend, you know, and an old friend of name, He'd visit us even it Marcia weren't there."

Paula lie another eigarette and held the much for Zelda "I suppose the P.B.I. has been questioning you too."

"Yes. That's routine," Zelda said, reciting her lesson. "They're very cateful about anyone trying to get into the State Depart-mean

"I distributes you wouldn't think it, would you?" Paula laughed.
"I distributed and all the interest in Nancy Dellett though, do you?" Mancy Dellett. Even here, at a dinner party, there was no pauling away from her. "I mean, that was six years ago, Lex and Mancy," Paula said, "and I don't get the connection anyway. Do there bink she's a communic?"

Six and Twenty-four years ago Tony. d Nancy, Lex

There havided, the cold Paula. Her hips feet a

She im't, of course She wouldn't be that interest ming but herself. She's an awful bitch. Do you know

感 "Slightly."

Well, take it from me, I've seen plenty of them-may of a one myself-but she's the buch of the world. Robw Walter, her ex?" Zelda shook her head. "He's mook. Nobody to set the world on fire, but a real good since You know what she did to him? She told him their your by, whom he idolized, might not be his hoy at all. That is the told him after she got her divorce and a fat settlement. Just or spite, because there wasn't any other point, whether it was tinde or not."

"That's fantastic," Zelda said. "It sounds like something out Rebecca. How would you know, anyway? Were you there when she's supposed to have told him?"

No, not personally." Paula laughed. "But these things get fround. Maybe a maid overheard it. Maybe Walter let something dip-he's a little on the dumb side. I don't know how to got with but it did. Everybody knows about it. I'm surprised you aven't heard it." She turned her face toward Zelda, away aron the light. All Zelda could see was a black blur. "The P.B.L. What do you mean?"

The investigator was very subtle, of course, but I knewbe was getting at. He thinks if the boy reilly isn't Will maybe he's Lex's. The kid's about five. It would five shrugged. "I don't see why the State Department should be Lex has an illegitimate son, do you?".

Zelda grapped the edge of the bench. The stone felt force peak, but the words came glibly, like a recording of a perch. "A man with something like that in his life" sten to blackmail. That's what they're afraid of." was explaining this. So nicely and reasonably to include the same same same the property of the same see, it is all based to running rates should have stopped there, but she had to great the same should be true, why Lex? Does the boy look like know," Paula said. "You can always read a resemble a round a resemble and a resem

12141

Zelda said toolishly, "he's dark then."

Frien't see how they expect to find out anyhow," Paula said zeria stood up. "It's probably not necessary to have definite:

profes Suspicion may be enough."

She walked rapidly tack toward the house, the other woman's forestiffs sounding like an echo of her own on the walk. Paulas was will talking, but Zelda did not listen any more. She wished she had not listened at all. Now she could no longer hide from herieff the meaning of Mr. Nye's quiet, persistent questions. This was what he thought she knew and kept coming barrelor, hoping to find out, hoping she would tell him, perhaps willight realizing she was telling him was dill. It would be no he. She felt ill. The house seemed clarified bright, hurting her eyes, nauscatingly hot after the cool distribute. Zelda escaped Paula Thayer and went in to find.

charte this the last rubber." he suggested to the others.

makery protested, not even Dorothy, who should have. Here make the hid not seem as sino that it had earlier, and her eyes, held a substitute spectacles had lost their bright look. Probably she would slump into a chair in the single of the land of the state of

When at last it was time to leave, there was a spire of the spirit. Everybody began talking at once, and the convertible sperned almost as sparkling as it had during cocktails. The spirit paired Dan and Dorothy that it had been a wonderful party and at that moment of release it seemed true.

God!" Tony said in the car. "I hope I never get stuck in a beidge game with that Evan woman again. She doesn't know a cord from her—"

"Never mind," Zeida said. "Why do you always get objective after midnight?"

He laughed. He was in very good spirits. He had won thirtyfour dollars and he was a little tight. "I didn't know I did. Obtakenity after Midnight. It sounds like the title of a play."

It was funny, she thought. He was so little like the boy she had married, the slow-talking, gentle, sweet boy, and yet she had never stopped loving him. She had changed too, of course, it was funny that the two different people they had become should want get along as well as they did. She didn't want to change poiling it now any more than she had six years ago. Maybe that was a sort of cowardice but there it was.

"Say, by the way," he said. "what the devil did you say to Sam Evan, anyhow? He seems to think you're a communist synapathizer."

I quoted from John Stuars Mill. I don't believe he had well heard of him. He probably thinks he collaborated with Mars and Engels."

"You must have said something else. Sam told me you wive-

He sounded perfectly sober now, and less agreeable. Same she thought. His old pal, Sam. As far as she know, they had met only once or twice before, at parties like the one tonight.

I'm not surprised he told you that. It's typical manufactor

I said nothing at the kind "I quoted Mill," she repeated. "I sug-Sested the light was and hand themselves mit them says the books? What books?"

turned on to the Boston Post Road, where gleaming recrucks as big as houses, with massive eyes that lit the daylight, rumbled ceaselessly by on a Saturday night. There and to talk loud to be heard above the roar.

Lary books," she said "You don't believe in burning them do work? My mother wouldn't allow 'The Sheik' in the house se L'est hold of it somewhere else. I thought it must be fascinating if she banned it. Any book. It's the same thing"

"She had not found "The Sheik" fascinating at all, only silly. It had not even been especially worked, except for one part. After a while the book had fallen open of its own accord to that pages She could remember it still It was where the herome in the She tent had seen him looking at her as though he could sees through her riding clothes to her niked body. That, in her thirteen year-old opinion, had been scandillous enough for anyone.

"What's Evan got to do with 'The Sheik?'" Tony inquired, in that way he had sometimes of making what she said sound ab-All I know is he was planning an advertising campaign? and had a chance at it, but I don't think he'll give it to me now. rouse got to be tareful with this loose talk. I don't want to loss clients. What do you think we go to these parties for?"

was incredible. A mount ago she had been thinking they got along, in spite of verything, and now they were far apart as if they had nist met. If she didn't know a war with the she was a street that the she was anything?

she said "Tony, do you know who Sam Evan is all right. He's the Evan Realts Company. He's about to the largest garden apartment developments in he wants to advertise it also the head of the Commutee of T. elve."

"He was?" Tony turned off the Post Road to a street that wound away from the mile of the brack her with two of quiet little passes. When he spoke spain, his tone had callinged. You man that brack that raised all the ruckus in the school of functions for the little communists that weren't there?" He can be led. And you quoted Mill to him. No wonder!"

She was still not sure whose side he was on. "No wander

what?"

"No wonder he thought you were a commic. I heard the only thing they had against one teacher was that she told her charthe Mexican War was a war of conquest, with us putting it over on the Mexicans. That's not half as liberal as Mill." He slowed the car almost to a craw! "Tell me exactly what you said."

She quoted the conversation as accurately as she could remember it, and when she had finished he gave her a good, solid buss on the check, said, "That's my Babe!" and sent the car speeding faround the curves of the road on screeching tires.

""What about the campaign?"

"He can take his campaign and stick it -"

"Never mind," Zelda interrupted.

"The Sheik," he said. "I never read the book but I saw the movie. Vilna Banky and Rudolph Valentino."

""Not Vilma Banky Agnes Ayres"

"No, it was Vilma Banky."

"It was Agnes Ayres. It couldn't have been Vilma Banky, She had a foreign accent, and the girl in the Sheik was an English searless or something"

File sighed. "How many times in one night do you want to prove me wrong? What's going to happen to my male stipe-

Mority?"

It occurred to her that ar this moment she was quite happy. None of her terrible questions had been answered, nothing had been solved or settled except that Tony did after all agree with her about Sam Evan, and yet she was happy. It was happy she pleasantly drowsy, the road was dark and quiet and she were going hains together, talking nonsense as though they were not middle said tarple with grown children, and she was happy. It was true.

Zero was alone in the breakfast room the new morning, drinking fire record cup of coffee, when Labby Gorman came to the back door. Tony was at the club for his Sonday golf game. Jimbhad alephoned the night before, as he often did now, to say that he was going to a late party and would stay over it a hotel. The record the household was asteep. Zelda had scarcely slept at all.

"Oh, I'm sorry,' Libbs said. 'I was looking for Jim. I thought' he might be—sometimes or Sundays he's out here cleaning his.

car gir

The precede us couse that Zelda had noted that day in the market, the last time she had seen the gul, was gone. She stood peering in through the screen door as though she thought Zelda might be concealing from under the table, and dibough her hands were hanging at her sides, she gave Zelda the impression that she was wringing them.

If she had looked less distriught, Zelda would not have asked her in. She was in no moral, after the long night of questions without answers, to entertain Jim's discarded go I. But she could not leave her standing there like that

"fim isn't home," Zelda said. 'Won't you come in?'

"Oh, no, I--" She searted to turn away and then changed her nind.""Well, yes Yes, I will "

She opened the door and walked in resolutely, but when she was there she seemed not to know what to do next. Her mouth was a little open, showing those tiny, regular teeth, and Zelda thought she looked almost vacant. She was pretty, though, and her little boy shorts showed off improbably long, lovely legs, in Pretty, long-legged, mannered, vapid. Miss Junior College (take finishing school) Zelda thought. All exous accessing incess removed all individuality of speech, mannerism, outlook boded off, until the synthetic distillation remained.

"Have a cup of fice."

im didn't come home last night," Zelda told her. 3 well know. "I haven't any idea when he'll be here." Libby pushed the cup and saucer away and then pulled a last Where did he go?" she asked with police interest.

"To a party in New York," Zelda said, and then ask with polite interest, "Was it something important?"

"No. No, nothing important." She had finished her com There was no reason for her to stay any longer. But she die Geo: She sat looking down at the empty cuo, and her lower than began to protrude a little in a kind of trembling pout. How aid you influence him against me?" she asked, in the same wife, correct voice, "What did you say to him?"

Let was so unexpected that for a moment Zelda could not wheak. My dear child," she said then. I sound like the slippers and party in a drawing room corredy, she thought "My dear child.

What are you talking about "

"Please." The word, particularly since it was a while before followed it up, did not seem to have any connection with mething, "I don't suppose you can help it," she went on finally suppose you'd be realous of any girl he liked. I don't mis you," she put in hastily, as Zelda was about to as Mothers in general Mothers with sons They always think it is good enough."

My dear child-" The physic kept recutring, like a lines rehearsal. "You've been reading things." What did they Stat Sophocles or Freud, certainly. Possibly Philip Wyles 30 didn't have to read, of course. Every purveyor of some open ad the silver cord in his bag.

asibby kocked at her lot the first time with soft, burt with t know how to talk to you," she said. "You're tog-class ear heaven! Zelda thought. Now she felt guilt was the difference of the diswing room comedy, and this was the scale with her to give up her husband where was the comedy?

dense all this. Believe me, if there's anything wrong between year fair this. Believe me, if there's anything wrong between year fair I had nothing to do with it. I've never tried in say was a break up your triendship." How self righteous I sound ship tright, when I had every intention or trying to break it up. Say affiled. "Even if I had wanted to, you overestaintie my influence of Jim."

Maybe you think you're not influencing him. Maybe he armore won't even listen much. I do that with my parents."
We all do. But a lot of it sinks in just the same. We don't like in admir it, that's all."

the looked at her more closely. Her held was bent over the sup again, and the back of her neck was white at the harline where the sun had not got at it. There was something pathetic, about that bit of white neck. Zelda could not have fold why had she looked at it she thought, She's only a hild, only two reals older than Ann.

to a spoke gently. 'Won't you take my word for it that I hady to about in this? I think Jim met another girl. I don't even know, which is." It cost her something to idmit this. She went far-the will, farther than she had intended. 'Peri, is it's only an intended. 'Peri, is it's only an intended.

Libby saul.

The reason forward against the table. The edge cut into her shows the said. "You must be mistaken." She said again molishly, "I don't even know who she is"

I save to coming, I thought to tell me," Libby said. "When I save to coming, I thought - But it was just to tell me. He said a secret. Only he thought he owed it to me to tell me. I think a deep breath and let it out in a quivering sigh, the trunning down after a crying spell. "I told him he didn't owe me anything. I told him to go to hell . That's why I came this morning, to take it backs and well him late.

She shook her head. After a minute she said, "hever thought I'd tell you. I didn't intend to, but I couldn't help it." She stopped and raised her eyes from the cup. They me langer had the wounded doe look. "That's a lie. I did intend the I'm that I told you Maybe now you can break it up."

"If she's a nice girl and Jim loves her, why should I want to break it up?"

"There must be something funny about it," Libby said. "He didn't keep me a secret, did he?" She began to cry, but she stopped quickly and blew her nose violently. "I'm sorry. I'm secret like a dope."

"It's all right Cry if you want to."

"Thank you," she said politely. She got up as it to go. "I wan you to know I did what you asked me to that day. I tried to will Jim he wouldn't be happy in his father's office. That's what started it."

P Zelda looked up at the girl. Something hurt her. She was up asware that the edge of the table was still digging into her rib

You told him that? Because I asked you to?"

Not exactly It's what I thought too. But he got mad when told him. He left without kissing me good right, he was so may and I've hardly seen anything of him since. The few dates what have had, it wasn't the same at all. I couldn't even talk to him. She stood well, like a girl who had had classes in posture as walked up and down stairs with a book on her head. Perhaps they had taught her to keep her mouth open too, like a breathle child, showing the perfect little teeth. It wasn't her fault. To was the aseptic, pseudo-British model they turned out is the itchools for parents who considered the standard American static trude. In spite of it, she was a nice child.

Thank you for listening to me," she said. "I didn't mein never expected..." She stopped and started again."

for barging in the this. It was nice of you to let me. You're not the way I thought you were.

Zeich willed. Timisjudged you too. She walked out to the door the girl. "If there's anything I can do, I will."

when Jibby had gone, she made herself another cup of coffee and good leaning against the kitchen country, gulping it. Now, there was this. Everything at once.

that there is anything I can do—But she had a desolate feeling that there would be nothing. It was the same helplessness she had telt when Jim was eleven or twelve, so absorbed in a model plane he was building that he would not come to dinner. She had gone into his room to take the plane away from him, and he had held her hands, similing in his ingratiating way, but all at a once two strong for her, overnight beyond her physical power.

She would have to stand by and watch this girl who had her claws in him— But this was the same phrase that had come into her mind about Libby a few weeks ago. She did not even know who the girl was. It hadn't worned her schools when she thought it was just someone with whom he was hiving an affair; who would help him get Libbs out of his system, but now she was an enemy.

"Good Lord!" she said our loud, and then she heard Marcia's step outside the kitchen, that incredibly light, quick step, and her sister came in, dressed in a violet blue hylon hourecoat that Zelda, had nover seen before. "Good morning." Zelda said. "You look positively orchidaceous."

Marcia looked down at herself "This old rhing? I've had it since Thursday What were you 'Good Lord ing' about?"

Zeles poured her a cup of roftee. This was all she would have now, and at dinner, in two hours, she would plead that she was starved because she hadn't had a thing but a cup of black coffee "all dis long."

"The just discovered," Zelda said, "that I don't like any girls," while went to marry Jim. The way it says in the books and one John's Other Wife's Mother in Law. Libby was here suggesting as miles, and I said, My dear child, hahahal "But there it is."

"Who's Libby?"

the fire and who coust the Citations in the court of the Meaning you've seen it all along?"

Marcia ignored this. "Astuter of you, I guess," she said then you always were one to analyze the hell out of everything including yourself. How can you have any fun?" She differ want for Zelda to answer. "So you're jealous of Jim's girls, the gree you going to do? Go to a psychiatrist? Jim will marry are you going to do? Jim will marry are you going to do? Jim will marry are you going to do? Jim will marry are you goin Zelda laughed "Oh, Marce, you're wonderful; you're goods

ing. I'm glad vou're here."

The too. She tried the coffee again and her eyes laughed to the edge of the cup. With that much of her face showing the children have been eighteen. "I haven't had fun like this minimized moses went to Chicago." She giggled "Remember that to say that?"

Sure. Grandpa. What does it mean, anyhow?"

"I don't know I guess grandpa thought it was devilish.

wick that big, wicked city, Chreago."

There was a picture of grandpa hanging over the manual for a sharp little black eves and cagle nose and domed forehead mating the room. Their mother had moved it to the dinitive for a while after he died to make room for a landscape, the land not kept it there. She said it made her nervous to have the marching her while she atc. as if he disapproved of the manual form on the wall as he had been for twenty four verse to the land state of the manual form after the death of his wife.

Whenever the rame to Framington to Wait, the whole household the second translation of the secon was a terror. Marcia said.

but we were all crazy about him. We always wanted him were glad when he left, too. I think mostly we liked to be were about him, especially when he got older and was eller a devil. I here's nothing like a good, salty old family charges.

Andon't know," Zehla said. "He was a patriarch. There are patriarchs on more Just a lot of people who have five the people who have five people who have five

Marcia stured her coffee. "It's a good time to be alive. And the lime I'd have been the poor old aunt making entimicassing include back bedroom." She giggled. "Instead of making love in a severtible."

Tolda looked at her and thought of Libby, who a few moments had sat where Marcia was sitting now. She could imaging at forty-hye, making antimicassars. She could imagingly as an ancestor of Marcia's

Program glad you're satisfied with life," Zelda said. "Nor ma

Just I'd have been good with them. Kids need a lot of I've always had a sort of talent for love." She gringe complain, though. It was my own choice." She signs warm coffee. "Aren't you satisfied, Zel?"

onetimes. Last night, coming home from the Partridge mattered. This morning the feeling's all discovede Lican't ex-

Once when many was seek. Marcie and, and I though the was going to die—after Roddie was born, I think it was sitting out on the porch while the doctor was in her room, and some boy passed by and grunned at me. I remember thinking, I was glad I had my pink dress on, because I knew it was incoming, and I smiled back at him and the weight in my chest hand, away. Mama was worse that night, and for a long time I have a way. Mama was worse that night, and for a long time I have because I'd been happy for a little while." She lit a character and inhaled the smoke in that way of hers, as though the could not get enough of it. "Then I began to think that was a grazy idea, a wrong idea, to feel guilty for heing happy. I'd had those few minutes and I was better off for them. Who was going the begrudge them to me? Not mama. Not anybody. Unless begrudged them to myself."

You're talking about a moment," Zelda said. "The way you talk when the boy smiled at you-the way I felt last night. Those wife happy moments, but they aren't enough. Happiness is some-Thing deeper, more basic."

ments. That's how we live, isn't it? In inoments?" She put the sip down and the spoon jumped in the saucer. "This is a hill of a conversation for the crack of dawn. How did we get this it, anyway? Let's talk about something else. Tell me about the putty."

Zelda took the cups to the sink and washed them. The source with was clogged with gelaunous soap, and she muttered to berelf about Rena's carelessness, rehearsing what she would say to her tomorrow, lings she would never use.

"Paula Thayer was there," she told Marcia. "She saidh was fromised to call her and never did."

She dres a lot of talking."

es. She tells everything she knows. What ielse have to to offer. The has no bushand any more, no looks, and only a little withing as thency goes to tay had held it small child, forced against her will to apologize to apologize the child for something, she had held her cars so that she could not hear herself say she was sorry.

parting to give me the low-down on Nancy Dellett. It all actions to give me the low-down on Nancy Dellett. It all actions to give me the low-down on Nancy's taunting bet husband, after their divorce, with the idea that her son might not be his."

it seemed a long while before Marcia actually spoke. "I suppose it might be true," she said indifferently. "Nancy nated Walter."

"Zelda did not know whether she meant it might be true that?"
Namey had taunted him or it might be true that the boy was not his son. Before she could ask. Marcia said.

That was what she gave up Tony for, and she ended up without the man or the money."

Did she? Zelda thought. Did she? "It's strange," she said ?

"how men can love women like that"

hading gal. Or was when I knew her. Beautiful and fascinating.

Who needs character?"

The words of a palely lewd song from her gulhood ran irrege sitibly through Zelda's mind. It began:

I wish I was a fascinating bitch: I'd never be poor, I'd always be rich . . .

Localy saw her twice, you know," she and. "Once at the office, which was working for Tony, and once up here at a particular termember her very well."

But of churse she remembered her very well. She remembered everything about her. The tall, magnuscent body, the pale, in personned face and the heavy hair twisted into an intrical.

knot at the back of his need to old stiffning sie to ultramenters. Sie sentiments de track of set as his stating selfantly the cold, grave, abnost sait tace, in seath the same out of rhythm with which her wit punctuated her long same tog slences. As Marcia said, who needed character?

That F.B.I. guy was always poking away about her constitution, you know, so that I never knew exactly what it is a white in mind. Do you suppose he's finished with us? It's a white in he's been around."

don't know," Zelda said. "I think he'll be back."

The front screen door banged and Tony came into the kinches was brown and smiling and he greeted them with appropriate stability, but Zelda knew, with that connubial sixth sense, the kinches not in a pleasant mood, probably because he had been appropriately game. It was something she could understand no more than the could the silent intensity of a bridge game. Surely pleasant bould not be pursued so grimly that the cutcome could be a hattering consequence.

How about some bacon and eggs?" she asked him soothing the can have them ready by the time you've showered and changed."

I don't think so. Just coffee," he said. "Where's Lex?"

Where do you think, at this ungodly hour?" Marcir a Tony looked at the clock. "Ten after twelve," he said wilked out. A minute later he was back. "I'm home yet?"

Nor yet."

He staited to speak, looked at Marcia and changed his many he went out, they could hear him muttering something along decadent bunch."

What's eating him?" Marcia asked.

ausper, he shot over 85 "

She wanted to tell him about Jim, but she would have until his mood changed. Such childishness, the too man in a pet because to hid not done well a

She wanted no tell him bout his top. Which one her brain charter that we would be the brain charter that the brain charter the brain that the

Les said, appearing in the door way the said appearing in the door way the said on my door and told me to get up if I wanted by the eggs. If you want some, go down and tell Zel." Les of arm around Zelda "I do want some. I do indeed. The think you were running a hotel, not for a minute. "I have sooked my own bucon and eggs."

The boked down at Zelda. Though he could have been up only in the boked down at Zelda. Though he could have been up only in the paper of the collar of his yellow and blue papernas folded nearly have over his blue stoped robe, the scent of one of those new, many colognes about him, piney or tweedy or woodsy.

The you want me to. Zelda?" he asked, as tenderly as thought the asking if she wanted him to kiss her. "I'd be glad to." moved away from him to get the eggs out of the refrigered to I'm cooking something for Tony anyway, she said.

red inetal ladder stool, and the little sear overflowed with violenty and the little sear overflowed with violenty "You know why you know it's not a hotel? Because the aren't any bills."

"What are you suggesting? That I'm a sponger?"

ANCE L POU ?"

The minned. "Sure. But Zelda doesn't mind, do you, Zella d worke the eggs into a bowl. "Do you think the job a bowl."

He horsted himself up to the counter as light and the there swinging his legs, but where his pajarit fell was sain his neck a little Zelda could see to flabbiness the sun-tanned skin. "My life's an open book," he said, "it I may coin a phrait.

"Ob, Zell" Tony called from upwater "I chink bacon and eggs at that!"

"I know," Zelda called back. "I'm cooking them. "Bake one gritable husband," she said to Marcia and Lex, "out under sect running water for five minutes, dry thoroughly and serve

"I should have married you, Zel," Lex said. "You know!

to handle a man."

Yes, indeed, Zelda thought. Peace at all costs. Blind deal Edumb, but peace. "You had your chance," she said, and had no videa why she said this now, after so many years "Did you know that, Marce 2 Did you know I was cruzy about him once?"

"Sure." Marcia got up and began setting the table in the breakfast room. "You used to neck with him at the Studio when he and I had a late date

Zelda looked at Lex, but he was giving up at the ceiling, minging his legs and whistling solily. He was enjoying the the thought. She wished she hadn't started it.

"He didn't tell me," Mucia said. "Even Lex has his code." But You were never cut out for entright, Zel. She laughed. "You used to act like the dame caught in the cer in the silent mixies. graking a big thing of smoothing her hair and straightening her Edress, so the audience would be sure to get the idea."

Zekla pur the bacon on paper to drain. "Well, well. And all these years you never said."

"I didn't think it was important. I'm going up to dress whe said. This character is taking me to a polo match this dierficon, and if I don't start now I won't be ready." She wished it Zelda. "See you make him wash the dishes."

Zelda called to Tony and put the bacon and eggs on the table. She deserves better than you, Lex," she said. "I hope she knows this time."

I hope she doesn't." He shd off the counter, "Someth get the short end," he said amiably. She's had it."

"So have I keed. You never met my second wife. There's a horror wife, it want to hear it wante time."

The hepr jumping into strange beds. Didn't you?"

models more to it than that." He sounded annoyed, but, a model of later he chuckled. "What if you had married me, Zel? It could have happened. A little this way or the other and it would have. We'd still be married, I'll bet. You'd have hung on "Sour mean, in spite of anything?"

think so," he said. "I think you like to keep what you've got If it's yours, it's good. Am I right?"

"I don't know, Lex."

"Tony came down in a new Persian print shirt and slacks that bittoned across the waist without a belt. "That smells good, he said. He kissed Zelda, parted Lex's shoulder and sat down. "What a faid game I had this morning! I think they moved the greens every time they saw me coming."

you ought to sleep late Sundays," Lex said. "It would do you more good."

Youy shook his head "Life's too short."

"It might be shorter on the golf course. Notod, ever dropped deal in bed."

"You're a lazy sor of a gun. You always were."

"Not lazy, just relaxed. No ulcers."

policinatch and Tony looked at the paper. "These damn truck talks," he said. "It's like two strange dogs. Have you ever weather that? They circle around each other, stiff legged and weath spiring, and it's a toss-up whether it will all come to nothing or whether they'll be at each other's throats. Put a bone between them and you can make sure. If you can stand it, I guest it's being to wait."

seeps as though all the wars we've known have blended into one and the streets have always been full of uniforms, all our lives.

le dely seems than way to us. For the kids he cally so."

slammed the paper down on the value. Where the devil is Jim?

the with high. Tony, Libby was best. She say, the was eagued to some girl. They're keeping it some girl he ought to tell Libby."

Pony's face turned white. "Did she say who it was?

No. He didn't tell her."

think I know." He got up and began walking up and acceptance the kitchen and the breakfast room. She with would sit down again, near her. He was so separate from with his anger over something she know nothing about wished he would sit down and put his arm around her."

I think he's doing this for spite," he said. "To show make it warned him against her."

Who, Tony? Who is it?"

She could not reach him. All he could hear were him houghts. "What have I done to him? What does he thing home? We've always been pretty close. I've--" He stopped worked down at Zelda. 'He barged into the office once we years ago, when he was supposed to be at school, and after seeded money to get back. I didn't even ask him any question gave it to him. What does he want?"

of all the things he had done for Jim, this was what hembered; this was the peak of paternal understanding spessions asked.

Zelda could think of nothing to say to him except, "Man

"If it were anyone clse, he'd have told us. He'd have be around." He continued his pacing. "I don't know it wants of him, but she wants something. That little daily inde an uncalculated move in her life."

Tony, for heaven's sake tell me who she is."

He looked at her with surprise "Hallie Breed. To be at the office. She writes copy, among other things?" Pelda seldom went to the office. It made her feel self the brough she were playing a part for which she had been Service Hallidge Advertising practically. After all, she had been a reception

f remember her," she said. "What is she like?"

"Ide an impatient gesture, as though it didn't matter willike. "Three or four years older than Jim-a thoughter. Smart, smart is hell, full of drive, tough—" of her as something other than a sounding board. "Ball know how to stop it. If I say anything to him, I'll only and toward her all the more."

popose I talk to him" can try." He shool, his head, as though already negative tests. "I wish I understood it. I've never played the head." Christ, I know what a kid feels like. I remember to test to hell around. There isn't anything he couldn't have talked over. I don't know what the test."

thought she was going to cry. "It isn't your fault, Tong the believe you'd understand, that's all, or that you ever faithe feels."

is something more. It's as though I'd done something as though he hated me. When I try to find out, he shall be me."

of comfort, she thought. A wife must speak words, "It's nothing, I'm sure," she said. "Some phase he cough. If you ignore it, I'm sure it will blow over." "It's voice sounded a little better. He came to the back of a chair and stood rocking it. "Meanwhill the got to do something about this girl. If we call thing to him, and if that doesn't work— I don't know thing."

The will be all all and the same and the sam with it, and she finished washing the dishes. Same with it, and she finished washing the dishes. Same in the rack for Ann to dry when she came does to be to be to play tennis with Bill and then it to bed. Whenever she had nothing else to do, she are had been less robust. Zelda would have thought she was Marcia and Lex came down to say goodbye before drifted the polo match. Marcia was in pank now, a color tio was right, returned woman should have worn, yet for her it was right, returned woman should have worn, yet for her it was right, returned woman should have worn, yet for her it was right, returned a sound his neck, under his cashinere sport jacket. Sixed like a Hollywood character, but the flabbiness of his concealed.

Aren't we a handsome couple?" he asked "Me and my Zelda watched them zoom out of the driveway in the control She felt like a settled old woman, wat bing the youngste off gaily for a good time. Only she wasn't settled. Her son se going to marry some awful gul unless they stopped him as were they going to stop him? And Nancy Dellett she emptied an ash tray into the garbige pail, let the the pail bang, and went out to the terrace. She took the section of the paper with her so that if invone came she see ok as though she were reading it, but she did not read. She had been so sure it was over, in fact and in her mished and forgotten, finally. For such a long time known. Livery time he called to say he would be thought, he may be with her; it may not be over at watched him so, and everything he did of said and to her that it really was over-or that it was not sched him with other women, and even hoped there a would have been based than the one itemering in his life, or the party—she had seen Ann coming down that from visting some other child. Zelda had call content in and meet the guests, but Ann had not confidence from visting some other child. Zelda had call content in and meet the guests, but Ann had not confidence in and meet the guests, but Ann had not confidence in and meet the guests, but Ann had not confidence in a she always tried to do, feeling that it was time for her to learn a little social grace. She had not form them, so senseless in their embrace the had thought themselves ovisible—or not cared—so deal side theard her panicky retreat. As though it had been a least caught out!

the was no casual, suburban boredom, alcoholic party to with Nancy Dellett who had once thrown Tony over the man and had been working in his office ever since at left her husband. Not with Nancy Dellett. A dozen that fallen into the putern then. The many mights he is the had no stay in town. The strange, abstracted making the had attributed to the pressure of work. The phone had attributed to the pressure of work. The phone had walked in on, when he had hang up suddenly and man had been walked in on, when he had hang up suddenly and man had been walked in on, when he had hang up suddenly and man had been walked in on, when he had hang up suddenly and man had been worked in our wrong number.

the bad not known what to do. She had tried to think the projectaken, that it was nothing, but she could not black it is that she knew, she saw it in everything Tony did and sale the would have fold him. She thought she was some thought she was going to have to divorce him. That is and did.

the besid nothing. If he asked her -- He would not ask her begin end, it would be over, she had only to wait. She to the was doing it for the children, but it was more than see did not want to change anything, even by forgive the Forgiving Wife. She did not want to be the forgiving wanted to be Babe, Tony's Babe, as though she had a doc't know.

I he had always been. This was what she the had waited for, yet she felt bitter. He was been, as if nothing had happened, but for a f asked herself why and how, but then she stopped ese it was no use.

There had Les come in? she wondered now. When Between Nancy and Tony, the same as all those ye Nancy and Tony, Nancy and Lex, like one of the at the twenties revived in the forties.

Phichonewhichonewhichone?

Excuse me-"

be voice was soft, but Zelda almost jumped out of her Book Section fell to the flagstones, and the man wh ken sprang to pick it up for her.

Mrs. Halliday?" he said. "I am very sorry if I have i I rang the doorbell, but there was nobody." He did Thut he gave the impression of bowing "I am Ger eber, to see Ann."

Ec: was thin-faced but stocky, deeply tenned, attractive she thought. Yes, of course, Austrian. The Austrian a camp.

how do you do, Mr. Weber?"

Phone I have not disturbed you. I did not know, whet no answer to my ring-"

Zou haven't disturbed me." Mothing disturbs me, she the matter what happens, the phone rings and the dished and people come and I say, It will be all right at was just real Is Ann expecting you?"

said I sought come, if I could borrow my sinter's nice smile, a little tentative. "I do not have ari pologize. Even in America, there are th

She real and the second second course." She tried to say it warmly, but it was difficult for imagine why this young man should want to specially care. She had had enough to give a friends for one morning, enough of everyone. I could hideout was what she needed. But she said white Weber sat down on the glider, not rocking it. He distributed the American strong she knew were ill at ease with adults without being the diffident. Or rourse he was older than any of Anna even Jim's, twenty-three or four, she judged.

Course."

house at home is not unlike this," he said, looking up at looking. "Not so large, I think, but with more acres." He has wallet and extracted a snapshot. "Y u can see a three in the back. That is my mother and my small."

ded child of five or six on her lap. A dog lay on the lawn sok nice, she murmured.

y are." He put the picture back in his wallet. "Many of alive. He was killed in the war. Always he wanted." America, so I have come in his place." He smiled a sister came first. She married an American soldier from, who works now in an airplane factory. The fing my mother here, but she likes rather to stay in the not young, you see, as you are, though perhaps a significant was the mayor of our town. Also, which was published in the newspaper."

her, waiting for her to say something. The expected her to say. She looked at him and tentative smile, and she thought, Oh, for heaven! dra bov.

"Are you giving my references?" she asked him get

So that I'll feel it's all right to: Ann to know you?" He seemed embarrassed now. He looked down at his polished shoes. "I thought perhaps you had forbiddent" bo out with me. I can understand this You knew nothing the where I am from or who my people are."

How, she wondered, did they all get the notion that she influential? First Libby, and now this boy. Perhaps this what they were looking for, what they wanted-the moth the her foot down, the stern, forbidding tather. Nowas the Maybe there was not enough security in patents who were alread to stop you from leading your own life.

"Ann chooses her friends herselt," she said: "I rely to the "Judgment." What do I know about her judgment? she the the Realty? 'Surely if she invited you here today, you must be can't have disapproved."

She did not exactly invite me. I have asked ner so many I may take her out, and always she avoids it. This the body that I am coming if Is can borrow the car." Har have represently toward Zelda "At camp she is very pleasant ge seems to like me very much. That is why I thou Ann's pretty young, Gerhardt," Zelda broke in.

reds you're too old for her"

He laughed. 'But I am only twenty-four!" Yes, I know. That isn't very old. But And has the with boys her own age, in her own class in things Like Bill?"

uno ian'i chilair

My grandmother was the wife with the wife with the wife with the important citizens of the town will as Ann."

g stretches out longer than it used to, childhood, your think this is good?"

know. I only know that's how it is, and whether it.

have seen this I understand what you mean. Even sister. She is more than thirty years old, but I have seen the sister. She is more than thirty years old, but I have seen the sister. She is more than thirty years old, but I have seen the sister. She is more than thirty years old, but I have seen the sister. She is more than thirty years old, but I have seen the sister. The husband comes home late from work and the to a party." He looked suddenly at Zelda. "You took when a came before and saw you here I thought that this can not be mother, this slender lady in the girls dress. But kind now that this is how mothers look here." He smiled: "I think it is quite charming."

This are quite charming yourself, she thought, you and your winding candor. Ann is a little dope.

She adod up. "I'll tell Ann vou're here."

Thank you. Thank you for our little on the control of the control gift think, though, that Ann is a child."

cent inside. Tony was in the during room with the paper recent out on the table. He was looking over the ads, and he was glange up. Jun was still not home.

the moment she was not thinking of Tony and Jim. She, was seventeen, going on eight an attractive man was waiting for her on the territor. Not Bill, not a gawky boy, but a man with a good smile, and with him, an Old World background and a charming which how who didn't even strine his shoet of the shoet of the control of the what did he do, anyway?)—maybe eventsally belop into something serious.

The myl she thought, and laughed. Oh, my! How the stairs (after forty, take stairs) at knocked on Ann's door. There was no answer. When a sleep, even at one o'clock in the afternoon, no knock her.

Zelda went into the room. Ann was lying on her cross the bed in her white jersey and tennis shorts. It was damp and tangled and the visible part of her tack thich was pressed into the pillow, was flushed. She to mough she had been crying.

Over Bill, probably. One of their childish quarreliants a time when Ann had told her about them, not so in similarly. Zelda had always thought, as to say the things of the had the wit to say to Bill at the time. "He said I receive, so I told him to try a dose of Frances Gavin (that is his likes him) once daily after dinner." Zelda doubted the him any such thing. But it Ann wanted to try traces d'escalier on her, Zelda was happy to listen and it least it had given her some idea what was going on an had been as withdrawn as Jim.

Maybe it would be different now. Maybe, with an of would be less confident, eager for help. There was a could tell her. She could tell her how to have ting out of her hand. Could I? she thought. Or could the shook this off and leaned over the bed, aperally the soltly. Ann did not stir. Her head was here to so that her neck had the same exposed with the haped from the fiel, Public 2014 the stood shaking in flushed, heavy-little impossible to tell which—saying, "Get out the the here! Get out of here!" in a hoarse voice.

Ther how to turn him to another girl?

took a step toward her. "Ann, dear, it's mother, have been dreaming."

t have nightmares," Ann said sullenly, "You took I never have taghtmares." She sat down on the edge rubbing her eyes. "Please leave me alone."

3 moment Zelda was sure she was doned up. All the ingles she had read in the newspapers and magazines ing through her mind . . Teen-Age Narcotic Add Tr Coll Be Year Child . . .

is she said "Ann, what's the matter? Are you sick?" er voice as quier as she could. "Whatever it is, you kee tan tell me" ger did not look at her, "I'm all right" She sound marmal. "I weke up too suddenly, I guess. You star the pushed the damp hair back from her face and be it with her nogers. "What time is it?"

fine, Zelda thought. It's nothing. But she found her surreptitiously at the bare, brown arms. What's will she thought. What kind of confused silliness is the one o'clock," she said. "Gerhardt Weber is down of seemed to consider this. "All right," she said then, Tell han I'll be down in a few minutes. and went to the mirror. "Gee, I look awfull" was so typical, so healthy sounding that Zelda laund diagree with you," she said. "Take your sime and tan pretty. I'll entertain Gerhardt." She winked at le's sharp," and cought a glimpse of herself in said it. She looked like a lewil old Madara thought, self-life to the at this time to the time the self-life was at the time to the ti and began to punish her hair with hard, raging and began to punish her hair with hard, raging and harp, she thought. He's sharp. People didn't even modern. Why did she have a bressions like that? Why didn't she act—?

the stopped in the middle of the thought and the brush wied. She was being silly. This wasn't what she was sit. She didn't know what it was. Too much sleep, program mother said she slept too much, and it was probably as a got tired all the time. The trouble was she didn't feet with the when she woke up. Sometimes she felt worse, like they when she would help. She got up and took of the state and then stood for a moment looking herself over the state and then stood for a moment looking herself over the state and the food was lousye answay. You couldn't sleep the said the food was lousye answay. You couldn't sleep the said the food was lousye answay. You couldn't sleep the said the food was lousye answay. You couldn't sleep the said the food was lousye answay. You couldn't sleep the said the food was lousye answay. You couldn't sleep the said the food was lousye answay. You couldn't sleep the said the food was lousye answay. You couldn't sleep the said the food was lousye answay. You couldn't sleep the said the food was lousye answay. You couldn't sleep the said the food was lousye answay. You couldn't sleep the said the food was lousye answay. You couldn't sleep the said the food was lousye answay. You couldn't sleep the said the food was lousye answay. You couldn't sleep the said the food was lousye answay. You couldn't sleep the said the food was lousye answay.

She stayed in the shower a long time, trying to keep her made a college, but she couldn't. You'd think you'd be able to with your mind, but sometimes to will just it had some separate existence that had nothing to distribute at all, and you could not stop it from going off on the state only her mother hadn't waked her like that—if only her mother hadn't waked her like that—if only her after her—areyousickwhat'sthematteryous at things hat'sthematter.

When she had come in from tennis, her mother had interest his down to breakfast. She had smiled and entire the first and Not had delt a start of love for her, to make the life derivers the goldents sell ar had gone on down into the kitch

maybe she'd briter wait until she'd mid lies a was waiting, she had decided she might as well The time went faster when you were asleed figh't see now how she could have thought she could have to her mother He's sharp . . He's sharp . . .

That was Gerry doing here, anyhow? Why did he keep & when she never would make a date with him? Maybe that't go out there at all. Maybe she'd sneak through and take the bus downtown and stay away until dianertin she had done that time when she left Wilma's.

rurned off the water and wrapped herself in a towel. here want to think about that, but she couldn't stop her mis legan singing as loud as she could, trying to drown it of the couldn't stop it.

had never in her life been out at five o'clock in the most Even the light looked dangerous, like in one of those Engli movies where the killer was stalking someone through the E diff Freets. For a mixture, standing on the deserted sidewill she thought of going back inside. Wilma was asleep and would enow she had gone and come back. But almost as # harder liber came to her, she begin to run, with no idea and an until she was out of breath, and then she walked berself that she was silly that there was nothing to.

The sun was beginning to come up, and she was an diles from home.

and almost convinced herself when a man spoke to edoceway. She didn't know what he said, but she began to with and only when her throat was bursting did she that he had not followed her. It seemed hours being the friend a soliceman and asked how to get to the bus stop. T at her, she thought maybe he was going to and her or conseiling the bonn in h would be up in another hour; they never slept late

A strange car was in the driveway. When she went to wondering who was there at that hour, she saw Rend had on a pink silk robe that Marcia had given her, it dipped around her almost twice. A big, dark-skinned may driver's cap had her bent back against the porch and her. They were just above the spot where Ann her lather kissing Mrs. Dellett.

into ran back to the end of the road and took the neighborson. She had breakfast in the coffee shop and with the stores opened. Later she went to a more than there was kissing she closed her eves. By the time the at the usual hour she arrived from camp every difficult right.

cell, she wasn't going to do that again, wander around self all day; there was no sense to it. She might as with and see Gerry and get it over with. She didn't minds. He was nice. Only sometimes when she was with saide her feel as if he were hurrying her some place the want to go. He was quiet enough, and not fast of the wasn't that. She didn't know what it was.

the took a blue linen diess out of her closest and the back, rattling the hanger as she hanged it on the part back, rattling the hanger as she hanged it on the part hand on anyway, and up to her calves. With them she ware a red and aked shirt and loafers without socks. She tied her had a horsetail with a red ribbon, dabbed lipstick on had been downstairs.

could hear her mother laughing as she reached the termination of the country of t wide, fall shift the factor the Callege Ship. It, was a honey of a decision to the second factor of a decision of the second factor of

The pooked at her. For a minute Ann thought she was some reason Ann wished she would, though we we infuriated her if she had. It was as though she was a limit to be furious. Sometimes she thought she was a limit deat," her mother said. "You look nice and rested to true she wouldn't say anything. Not until later. Your supposed to truetze your children publicly, partied that were adolescents, because adolescents were very sensitive site mother have all about that She kept up with things and said, making it a general greeting. She glanced it with "Sit down, Gerry, for pete's sake." She flung here said canvas chan and backed off her loaters. Why am a the this? she thought. "You're so polite you make me

She would hear how the creammess of her mother's voice made berger bound rancous. "Would you like a cold drink, Gershard A coke? Beer? A Tom Collins?"

for Mank you," Gerry said. "I had hoped Ann would come

Ann said indifferently, without looking at him, sothing for a minute. "I thought, perhaps—my sisted place for dinner where you sit on a porch and there are made also music. I thought, if you would like to come with a sounds like a pleasant place."

Finaw," Ann said. "I'm sort of sired."

The laughed unnaturally. "But darling, you've been,"

The laughed unnaturally used?"

for hours. How can you be tired?"

she was attend. She didn't know why she said she was, which she was being like this. Out of the corner of her 'e she could see that Canada watching her, though she couldn't see the expression on his last. The left more too him. The left sparry for between the left sparry for the market spar

If don't know how I can be, but I am, the said."
Gerry stood up. "Perhaps you would like me said."

She was going to say that he could suit himself, but the plant of the

She could hear him coming up the flagstone walk, and any first feet, his loafers slapping. He always walked like the of the could hardly pull himself along, but on a tennis control a backetball court he was so fast you would never know it the same person. He had blown his top this morning because the wouldn't go after some of the balls she could see she couldn't get anyhow. "I'm running my game playing with you all the time," he had told her. They had had a fight about it, but the lines the fight hadn't really been about tennis at all.

He came on to the arrace with his hands in the possess of his dungarees, trying to took as if he didn't care whether has there or not. "He" he said, and then stopped, seeing her mother and Gerry, and said, "Oh. Helle."

She knew him so well. She knew him better than she body, she guessed, even better than she knew herself. Poor Bille.

"I wasn't expecting you," she said

"No," he said. "I guess not"

He sat down in the nearest char. It was one of those and en, new thin seasons. Bull looked all doubled up in it, his bottom almost said the pround and his knees up to his chin. She wanted to have the page him like that, and at the same time she wanted to be the looked and have the same time she wanted to be the looked and his knees up to his chin.

"Would you like a coke, Bill?" her mother asked

"No," he said. "No, thanks, I guess not."

Me wanted one, all right. He could always drink a color He strank about ten a day. But her mother knew it is a stranked maybe if I bring one out, you'll change your mind.

supposed to be nice to their children's friends Why would anybody want to meet on a state wasn't even any place to sit down.

ther went into the house, being nice to her friends, and posted after her. "She is a most attractive woman, you he said. "Most charming. Isn't this so, Bill?"

hipked surprised. "Yeah," he said. "Yeah, she's okay." see seems almost like a young girl," Gerry said the mother did not seem like. any Joing girl to him.

The must be a fine thing," Gerry said. "I mean for a girli to have so young a weather, as if she were a friend or a sister."

Be like anybody else," Ann said "Like most of my friends meshers: There's no trick to staying that thin when you smoke the thay the does and don't eat enough "

"It was only that she is thin."

Bill hoisted himself our of the chair and sat on the glider, public ing it back and forth as fast as it would go. "Say, Ann, can I talk to you & minute "

"Sure Go ahead. We've got tree speech."

No. "The scowled down at the flagstones. "I at an alone."

. "Leon to help your mother," Gerry said.

Being he could go, her mother came out with a tray, and Gerry artising to take it from her. She had brought glasses and boother toke and beer and a dish of pretzel sticks. Be nice to vous shillren's friends.

And hill had cokes and Gerry had been, Her mother ate a present stick. Sure, if you starved vourself you could stay thin. The stant Bill said in a loud voice, "how about you and me going drawn to the beach for a swim"

"Well, mally, Bill, after all," Aur said. "You can see I've got combany.

Yeah, the sales and the tables enough the state of the famebody the he got it burned again and then it peeled some man because the bad tried wearing one of those white paper next that had looked even worse than the peeling, and the made him take it off.

"The beer is good," Gerry said. "I did not know the state of the signed a little and smiled, looking up at the biding the half empty glass. "Everything is good here the shall never change."

"Things always change." Ann's mother said.

He nodded. "If only it is slowly, so that one gets desired and does not notice. But I am just able to catch my bread some a little while. I would not wish to be all upheaved that." Nobody wishes to be upheaved," Ann's mother mid. Then she smiled at Gerry. "Don't sarry, be thardt. You'll be all right here. I believe there's a don't have bothing can touch."

A core?" He thought a little. "It is strength?"

Not exactly. I was thinking of what Thomas Graffeded the unconquerable mind and freedom's holy flame."

The unconquerable—' One moment, please." He more a facility and a little notebook from his pocket and hegati with the lease tell this to me again."

The glider screamed. "Say, Ann, will you come of the said "I've got something there."

70h, all right, 'she said in a bored-voice.

He walked out ahead of her, shuffling his feet. The his head was sunburned, the scalp pink under the stubble truch haigeut. She had once seen a newborn baby with the that.

The went halfway down the walk and then he through and housed at her, standing with his hands harding at his house the whole face moved, as if he was trying to say something and his voice with the course but when he did speak all he said was

"Let sigh to the beach."

"For price sake, how can I? I can't just go off and leave him. sinding there can I?"

The limit even talking to you. He's talking to your mother?

TW No wants to?"

Welf, you wouldn't, of course. You never want to talk about anything intelligent."

come back fast with one of his own. But now he just glanced at her and then looked down at the ground.

"Okay," he said. "Okay, go on back there then, if you want to.

I'ni kaving."

to say admerning that would make everything all right again, and she longed to say it, but she couldn't

There to get dressed anyhow, 'she said. "He's taking me out" to diamer."

For a moment she thought she could see what he was going to look like when he was grown up

"Then I guess we're not going steady any more," he said,

"are with would be easy. She could make an excuse to Gerry, tell rands the could make an excuse to Gerry, tell rands the could make the easy. He could make the excuse to Gerry, tell rands the could make an excuse to Gerry, tell rands the could make an excuse to Gerry.

words take it all right-and what if he didn t?

the mach, where hardly anybody ever went. They would walk out on the rocks in their bare feet, not even feeling the sharp redge because their soles were so calloused from many summers of walking on the rocks, and they would sit and warch the boats, and tilk. Differ summers they had talked about school, about Mr. Landson who always gave the girls better marks than be gave the boys, and about Joe Wickett, twenty years old and still not out of high sickool spatiations, who actually a speed Best leaders for the Same Chair and about the way the same could get lain. Thornchike to tell them the questions are way the same to sake on a bistory test. When they were so warm the same old hardly stand it, they would dive into the cold, salty, many decided, and race, and splash each other, and grab each other a less maker water.

Don't be silly," she said. "Gerry doesn't count. He had be "So he's twenty-four years old. If you'd rather go with him

"Okay, if that's the way you want to take it."

"What other way can I take it?"

She watched him start toward the car, and she could have lapped him, but instead she rurned and went back to the trackle, ther mother and Gerry were talking and laughing. Her mother field a glass of beer now too, and she must have just been reported because there was a moustache of torm on her lips that was a moustache of torm on her lips that was a matched. Bill's car started in front of the lappe, and Ann spoke in a high voice, as it she had to make here!

The get dressed now. I'll be ready in a few minutes there's the laughed, without knowing why. "Did you say there's the laughed, without knowing why."

Gerry smiled at her. "They are beautiful, that chery are be someone who had the things a small and mean. I have heard of someone who had the things a small."

She thought he might be talking about her. Beautiful but was the way she was turning but was kind of exciting, she thought as she went up to her them. Like Rebecca, or Catherine de Medici. She looked at her them the mirror, and wrinkled her nose in disgust. Beautiful photos in disgust.

There were snapshots stuck all around in the state of the mirror, Joan her best friend, in the white dress she had worn when a second the school steps. Joan and herself, eating Good the school steps. Marlon Brando, cas sure of a move the school steps. Marlon Brando, cas sure of a move the school steps. Marlon Brando, cas sure of a move the school steps. Marlon Brando, cas sure of a move the school steps. There was one of him kissing her the night of the school school by the school school state. And had to pay him a dollar for the negative. And had keeps print hidden in her dary for a while, but then she had taken to the school school was a little corner of torn white paper stuck in the few between a picture of Joan and one of Bill. She hadn't adjust it before. It was from another snapshot that had been the few days ago. She took a nail-file and few days ago. She took a nail-file and few days ago, around thoroughly inside the few days are there was nothing left. When she had she began to shiver.

The not going, she thought. I'm not going out with Gerry, I'm not going out with anyone. I'm never going out with anyone the with anyone, the could hear In Stafford singing it love and busky and sad. Then it turned into Calvpso. I'm never going out with anyone, because everybody makes me sick and I'd refer be stone cold dead in the mirket . . .

shode raile, and she went into her mother's room to and the She though it might be Bill, but she didn't want it is if he said, "Say, look, it's clay. I don't care if you go off a linner with him," she didn't know how she would an awe. He might say that, and she didn't want him to say it. She was a little to be Bill, and yet when it wasn't, she was a little disconfied.

The was low and quiet and at the same time risp. You could not mistake it. Her father said it was a voice like perfecting

"Health Mr. Nye," Ann said

She went to the window that overlooked the terrace and told her mother site was wanted on the phone. At the wind of her voice both of the tages on the perfect lifted to her and for a moment she felt like a priestess or something, standing way up above them, looking down at them. Her mother asked; Who is it?" and when Ann told her, all the silly bright laughter went but of her face and she looked the way she was supposed to old enough to be Gerry's mother. Gerry, to whom the standing was body a sound Ann had made, smiled at her and raised his glass a little. It was so out of place, though of course he didn't know, that she withdrew from the window and pretended not to see thim.

Thut she couldn't say anything after all. What could she say? I forgot about Mr. Nye. I forgot about all that. I thought it was finished with. No, I didn't think that. I was just trying not to think anything about it, because it was too much. There have there too many other things.

Her mother went into her room and shut the door, and Ann neurned to her own room and began getting dressed. She would so with Gerry, because her mother would like it and she wanted to please her mother now, on account of Mr. Nye.

At least she thought that was why she was going. She was inever sure of her motives any more. She was never sure of anything about herself. Sometimes she thought she might not even be Ann Halliday at all, but somebody clse whi looked like her and wore her skin. Maybe Ann had died, and another soul had entered her body. It was supposed to be the body that died first, but nobody really knew. Maybe in some cases you could have a like of different souls in one lifetime. Or it was possible that she hadn't exist at all except in her own mind, that nobody really knew she was there, and that the people she saw and talked to have out of her own head.

Her mother knocked on the door and came in and sat down on the bed. "I thought you'd be almost ready," she eaid; but she did get seeth to be thinking of what she was saying. She halled pale.

She looked terrible. She kept puffing at her cigarette as if she were afraid it was going out.

"What did Mr. Nye want?" Ann asked her.

"He statist to see me again tomorrow. I thought he was all finished." She wadded up a Kleenex and used it for an ash tray. Some day she was going to start a fire like that. "It's getting to be a putsance," she said. "I wish Lex had gone somewhere else this attamer."

Her mother was talking like this again, as though they? were the same age. Other times, when she said she was talking to her this way - "Let's not discuss it as mother and daughter bot si, two human beings, triends —it didn't rurn out like that?" It was a hard thing to keep up with.

What do you suppose he'll ask you this time?"

Her mother shrugged. "He's asked me everything in the book

I suppose if will be more of the same"

the couldn't have come to the point about Mrs. Dellett yet, Anny thought, because nothing had changed between her mother and father. Maybe tomorrow he would ask, "Do you know that yourse husband kissed Mrs. Dellett and called her 'darling?' Do you, know they had an affair?"

When you were over a certain use, you could decide which parent you wanted to live with. Lacy Cameron had chosen here mother, but now she was serry because her mother drank all the time, and still she couldn't past go and leave her. Ann woned decid whether her mother would become an accombic. It reights be better to choose her father. Maybe her father would marry. Mrs. Dellett, though Well, maybe she could stry at college all; therefore and spend holidays with other girls and get jobs in the sufferer. College girls, could be want uses at summer hotels and early a lot of money, as much as $100 a month

"You're asleep." Her mother laughed. "You're asleep." with your eyes open. Even poor Cerhardt's patience will give out if you don't get down there soon." She looked at Ann in the mirror. She did not seem pale any more. "My mother would have given a tonic. Something called Ecllowes Hypophoc.

phates. We drank it in a little water after every meal and it was so hitter we life it there he doing home gard.

Historical transfer spain. Anyway, if he had a psychiatrist.

inh got up and looked in her closet. "What do you hould weer?" Don't tell me it's up to me. Don't tell in a decision I'll have to make for myself. Don't-Something glamorous," her mother said. "He's never reference glarmorous, has he?"

This was another way her mother was. They were the e now too, but now it was Ann's age.

"I haven't anything glamorous."

Let's see." Her mother came and looked too. She too the white linen and held it against Ann. "This, with your line lilend you my gold belt and maybe gold carrings. Com it! I think you'll be sensational."

She was all excited. She kept talking while Ann dressell and ting back and forth to her room for things. Anybody would thought Ann had never had a date before.

I'm so glad you decided to go, she said. "For a walk out we I could have strangled you. That attractive boy, and you were acting like such a brat. But it didn't seem to distances fint. Maybe he liked it. How does anybody ever know with She smoothed a little tinted cream from a booth over the's nose, and the fretkles disappeared. "He's pretty liken ich you, you know. How do you feel about line?

"He's okay."

realize I'm not supposed to ask. Can't we forget ann felt sorry for her All day she had been feeling torry for erybody. I guess I'd have to go with her, she thought, I co mit daddy whenever I felt like it.

"He's old," she said. "He's twenty-four."

"If he doesn't care, I don't see why you should. It by eye teeth to go out with a twenty four that the man as seventeen. The best I could do was twenty and he another citarette. "His name was Stephen, and he said I had another than Clara Bow, and that I was the strangest combination of and and young he'd ever seen. That was because I told that I was nineteen, but sometimes I forgot to act it. The struck are eightette in the corner of her mouth while she helped Ann but the dress over her head. "He wasn't a foreigner, thought."

This is much more exciting."

The mother looked at her and then laughed "That's a good quedoor. I don't know. We used to think it was. Society gift with always marrying foreigners with titles, and most of the Hostwood favorites had accents. I guess because the world was birder then. A Frenchman or an Austrian was somebody fart of mysterious. You couldn't get to him in a matter of house and he hardly ever came over here, certainly not to liver I that's why."

and instened the gold belt around her waist. It was a lifting transition if she held herself in, it would be all right. She looked obsolutely wonderful.

you're terrific," her mother said. "I've never seit you're this. You go down, and I'li stand up at the window and waith of crhardt's eyes bug out."

As a kissed her carefully so as not to smear her lipstick. She want first way down the stairs and then stopped for a minute trying to hold on to the feeling of herself. It was getting away from the again, and she did not know who she was going to be not. Not the same Ann, certainly, who had kicked off her least on the terrace. Now her ears tell heavy from the earthing was another middle felt tight from the gold belt and everything was attached.

proble feeme down, her father looked around from the news proble fee had spread out on the dining room table. He pushed the distributed at Mrs. Dellett like that. But she didn't want to think about it. She didn't want to start thinking about any of that are

"What's happened to you, baby?" he said. "You've aged five years since I saw you tast. Bill will fall flat on his face."

He never knew what was going out. Sometimes he assumed and acted interested, but he never remembered. It had been months before he stopped forgetting Bill's name. She didn't see how it could be much fun to be thinking about the advertising himness all the time, so that you weren't even sure who your daughter's friends were.

"I'm not going out with Bill," she said. "I'm going with Gerhardt Weber. He's waiting for me on the terrace. Would you like to meet him?"

He shook his head "Let's spare us both. I never know what to say to me. But how come? About Bill, I mean? I thought you two were an old settled couple."

"Oh, Gerry doesn't count," she said. "He just stopped by, and I had nothing to do. He's much older than I am, twenty-four." "Ah, well. Bill can relax, then. It's almost as though you were going out with your grandfather, isn't it?" He grinned. He was sarguing at her, but she didn't mind so much. He wasn't sarguine like her mother, not in the same way, anyhow. She felt is if he were on her side, even though in a little while he might not remember much of what they had said. "Are you frying to kid somebody, baby?" he asked.

She laughed and blew him a kiss. She was the lovely young daughter, blowing a kiss to her dear old father, tripping out to meet her date. On the walk to the terrace she slowed down again. Her date, she thought. And it wasn't Bill. For the first little in almost two years, she was going out with sometime else.

ourse it didn't really count

Are you trying to kul somebody, baby?

On his way home from the station, Jim stopped off at Nat Tillion's garage. Nat kept open on Sundays because otherwise he had be could never each up with his work. The lines take a day off except once a year, when he closed up his place for two weeks say went fishing somewhere in the Maine woods,

"I. usera take off Sundays," he told Jim once, "After I was through readin' the paper, what was I gonna do? I got no family to talk to, or nuthin'. So where do I find myself? Out in the gay rage, toolin' around with the car. Even when there was nuthin, wrong with it, I'd fool around. So if I was going do that, why hot get paid for it?"

Jim found him with his head under the hood of an old Packard?

He did not look up when he heard Jun's footsteps.

A minute, please," he said. "I'll be right with you."

Jim waited without speaking, leaning against another car and weiching Nat's big, deft hands. The smell of gas and grease and sweat brought back the summer he had worked here, and he could remember how it telt; he could feel that way now, thinking about it; loose inside, empty of everything except the car he was working on, nothing to him but hands and eyes bearing Swede who could have been fifty or seventy. His eyes, were bright blue and his hair was so fair that whatever white hairs he had were lust in its blondness

"Jim, for criminy gee! Why didn't you speak up?"

fan grinned. Nobody had ever heard Nat swear in any accepted faction; but he had a cellection of quaint, coined expressions which he could make sound singularly obscene. He was considered a character, and he played it up for all it was worth

I'm in no hurry I was watching him estured back to his jalopy, "Little Schinoe needs sp.yk plugs"

Well, help vourself. You know where they are. No, wait. I'll change your plugs, if rou'll take a look at this old son-of-a-state monger. He's, got a knock like nuthin', you, ever heard, and E can't find the clipperin' thing. A pig, that's what he is. A real-pig."

What the matter? You too chipperin fancy these days to stick head inside a car? I heard you was down to New York now, desk-squattin," He shook his head. "A squeamish shame, that's what it is a matural good essection in the work"

Shut up! Inn said. All I came in here for was long my spark plugs changed. Do you always tell your customers. The stooped. Talson was looking at him with his mouth open. I m knorve Nat. I didn't mean that."

That's all right." The big man turned his back to his ladd best over the Packard again. "Just help yourself to the stark follows; or wait till I'm through this job, if you want, and the lange 'em for you.'

"Nat." Jim moved to his side, leaning against the Package niudguard. "Nat, let me look at it."

No, I don't guess I want you to "

Fverything's all cockeyed. I don't know what I'm saying has time."

Nat did not answer Jim stood there waiting, and be didn't was so important, why he cared what this time.

Swede thought or said.

wat spoke finally, without looking up. "Women?"

es, Partly."

What happened to that one used to come around here? That he like a pony?"

Like a pony? You mean Libby?"

That's the one. Used to stand and water you and sort in the mane. What happened to her?"

She's around," Jim said "I don't see her so much any more sony, he thought. Goddani. She was like a pony at that sy'n manged."

He came up out of the car. His hands were black with greate, the grease soaked into you all over when you worked around a grage, into your pores and your hair and up your notering the with the oil and the sweat, and a shower never left as a great it did after the day was over.

Engiged, huh?" Nat said. "Who to?"

A Now York girl. Nebody knows it yes."

"Yeah." Nat said:

"My father cheen't like her. He'd try to stop it if he knew about the want he could. But she won't marry me until we can per his approval, and I'll be Goddamned if I'm going to suck around for it.

the main't told all this to Libby. He didn't know why the half he was telling it to Tillson.

Nat said.

Ernakes it tough I don't know what to do. Every dan the tip in the air. Next year this time, maybe I'll be in Korea what the hell?"

"Next year this time, maybe I'll be six feet inder. Here." He tossed Jim a heavy wrench, so unevpected the lim almost missed it and got it in the stomach. "Look, so in the find what's the matter with this squeamish pig.

the world in back and got into a pair of coveralls. He world studer the bood of the Packard for a while, and then he rolls wingself underneath on a board and lay on his back, looking i into the bowels of the car He knew he was going to find trouble. He didn't know how he knew it, but he did.

the were Nat Tillson's son, he'd probably be finished w his was where he'd be, work here in his father's garage until some day he'd take it over. The much did Talson make out of this place? he woudered Not as much as Hallie's salary, he bet Hallie darling, how would like to be married to a garage mechanic? ... Profess lowers, this is my husband, Jup, who works in a garage How interesting Do you knew the derivation of mechan It is on an old Angle-Saxon word meaning scum.

- would be his life, all settled.

eased the wrench up carefully, settling it where he wanted reing it competent and responsive in his hands. The tight vent out of him. His arms ached, but he did not know a nothing but this engine, this old squeamish pig of alled himself out, more than an hour later, Nat his another car up on the grease rack. He glanged at Jim. "You're all set for spark plugs,"

"Thanks. The Paskard's all set ton," lim rubbed his blackened hands slowly up and down the legs of the coverall. You want to try it?"

"I don't need to, if you say so. I knew you'd fix it."

Jim went to change. He grinned at his streaked face in the mirror. He looked had enough anyhow, but the mirror distorted his features and emphasized the dirt. It was one of those metal mirrors they used in the army.

Say. Nat," Jim said, coming back out, rolling down his sleeves.

You were in the first war, weren't you?"

Was in a war. Not the first, by a bombsight. They said it was gonna be the last, but it wasn't that neither."

Did you enlist?"

"Yeah."

.:"Why?"

"How the criminy cripes should I knew? All those years age.

Maybe I wanted to be a simmerin' hero." He lowered the ear the grease rack "You ever want a job, come around, hear?

Like I said, you're a natural."

"Thanks. Nat."

"Nat looked at him. "You rather do that desk-squattin'?"

This my father's business, and it's there. I won't have to worry bout money. You see, my father's a very smart guy. He makes money with his brains. So I have to make money with my brains too, or lots of people won't like it."

"Yeah," Nat said. "That girl wouldn't like it."

You see how it is Next year I'll graduate from college. When you're a college graduate and your fative's a smart man and you like in Underwood Pask, you've got to work with your brains. You see how it is."

"Yeah," Nat said. "I see. That's a lotta reasons,"

"I'd be a Goddam fool," Jim said. "The business is gight there

Year," Not sant

"You big dumb Swede!" Jim shouted. "Can't you say anything but 'Yeah'."

He flying himself into his car and backed out with a roar. He was crazy to have come here in the first place and spilled all that shift of Tillson. What did Nat Tillson know? All he knew was cars: He couldn't even speak good English. It was crazy to have come here and shot his mouth off and fooled around with that Packard. What did he want to fix somebody's Packard for? He wasn't any Goddam grease monkey. He was an advertising man. He was engaged to Halhe Breed. He are lunch at Whiteney's, where Max, the head watter, called him by name, "One extra dry Martini, Mr Halliday?" But anyhow he had fixed that old Packard.

A trickle of sweat ran down his back. He parked the car and went into a drug store for a cake. When he had finished it, he called up Not Tillson from the pay station.

"Say, "Nat, 'this is Jim." he said. "I forgot to pay you for the plugs."

"I'll send you a bill."

"Well, okay." He began to sweat again as if he had never hist, the coke, "Listen, Nat, I don't know what the hell's the matters with me. Talking to you like that."

"Forget it. Everybody calls me a big, dumb Swede."

"But not me, Nat. I don't feel that way. I pist don't know what the hell's the matter with me."

"When you find out," Nat said, "come around," and he rung

Jim went back to the fountain and ordered another coke. He drank it in three gulps, and nausea swam into his throat. He had had too much to thank last night that was it. He always drank too darnn much at Flaine's parties. Everybody was so clever, and he couldn't pist sit there. Those were the people who were going to be their friends when they were married. After a few drinks, he was clever too. If he witched Hallie's eyes, he could always tell when he was doing all right. It took a few drinks.

"Say, Mac," he said to the fountain boy, "give me an Alka-

He watched the white tablet dissolve in the water, empting into frantic bubbles. It reminded him of an experiment he had done once with a chemistry kit somebody had given him when he was eleven or twelve. The stuff had cracked the test cope and second all over the floor and damn near scared him to death. Imagine drinking this glup, he thought, but when he had it down he felt better.

Fig. got in his car again and drove slowly out of the village.

The didn't remember much about the end of last night's garty, but they were all alike anyhow. Everybody was very clever, and the more they drank the cleverer they got. He thought the best time he'd ever had with Hallie, outside of when he was aligne with her, was that time when Wick was in town on a three-day that time right after Jim had asked her to marry him.

If we're engaged," she had said, "we have to celebrate. Chen-

A see had told her about Wick. "I don't know," he said "Fle less to understand him. He's son of hillbilly. Anyway, he acts like one. I don't know if you'd know the kind of girl—"

"Stop worrying, lamb," she said, and then put her fingers to "simouth. "Oops! I mustn't sall you that, must I? Anyhow, "non-worrying. I know every kind of girl. I know everybody. The valuable person to have around."

You don't have to tell me that, darling."

File didn't like her calling him "lamb," and she didn't want that to call her "honey" She said honey sounded like some body like in a dirty wrapper making coffee for a guy on the night shift. It didn't think much of darling. Her friends used that for each other instead of names. There was a man she knew not arransy ther, who even called other guys darling. It said to had you that to throw up. But if she liked it, a was clear to the

I'll get Garia Mahon," she said. "We'll really give your

Wick a time

She condor't have done better if she had known Wick all her life. Shirin Mahon was an actress who had to model to make a living. She had modeled for some of the agency's ads, and that was have dailie knew her. When she was modeling, she was depressed. Hallie said, but when she had an acting job she was "wonderfully manic." The night she went our with them, she was in a try-out of a new writer's play in some old theater that Greenwich Village.

Wait till you see me on Broadway," she kept saying.

absolutely bawdy!"

and a beautiful figure. One minute she talked Bryn Mawr English, and the next she was telling dirty jokes in raucous Brook lytera. Wick was fascinated. He did a kind of combinations Virginia reel and jutterbug with her on the dance floor of the Pertian Room and showed her how to drink a whole glass of their back loved it.

"I been to New York lots of times," he told her, "but this,"

the first time I ever really seen it."

"Wait a while, Bub," she rasped. "You am't seen nothin', ""
"What a beautiful pan of complexes," Hallie whispered to Jima"
"Camplexes?"

"Sure, "They's a both rejecting their backgrounds for some read son, Gloria, her Boston family and Wick; his college education,

I know they'd love each other."

hading rubbed off on him, much. He had cut even more classification had, and spent most of his time drinking beer and planting hot jazz records on an old phonograph you had to crank had. When he had to take a quiz, he could read through the manifest once and remember enough to get by, and forget it juit as that He did to the said, want to clutter up his mind. Still, he know a last that a lot of things.

They went to a place on Third Avenue where steaks were served burnt black on the outside and harely done inside. An orchestra played at one end of the long, narrow room, quietly, as if practicing, or playing for its own enjoyment. Once, when Jim looked up, Gloria and Wick were at the piano, doing a complicated, polished version of "Chopsticks," accompanied by the woodwinds and the strings.

"I didn't think anybody else was as crazy as Wick," Jim said to Hallie. "He has a girl named Helen, a nice, sensible girl. I dan't know. I have an idea she wouldn't mind Gloria, not for a three-day pass."

Hallie took his hand under the table. "You love Wick, don't you?"

Oh, sure, he thought. Hello, Wick. How are you darling? Jeez! "I love you," he said. "I wish we could tell them about us. It would be even more fun."

"We can't take a chance. Gloria gets around too much, If That's right. He spoils everything, the son of a bitch.

"But I'll work on him," Hallie said "You'll see. I'll be the girl every man wants his son to marry. I'll be transformed by love. I'll be demure. You won't recognize me." She held his hand close to her. He could feel her thigh against his knuckles. "You've got to work on him a little too, darling."

He didn't answer her. It was too good an evening. He ordered another bottle of champagne, and Wick and Gloria came back to the table to drink it, and they sang. "D-A R-T-M-O-U-T-H...

fairest of colleges .

"Jim, you of bastard." Wick said happily, "I knew I could count on you. This is the best damp time I ever had in my hall life."

Jim wasn't sure Helen would have liked that. He didn't know why he kept thinking about Helen. It was too good an evening think about anything. Wick wasn't married to Heles, any compact than he had been married to Libby

A porty, he thought. Nat Tillson could rially security some times. There was a picture in the family album of Jim's father in a kind of dress with a wide belt, sitting in a wicker popy cart. The pony had slender little legs and big eyes with a mane of hair falling across them and a look of wanting to run off and only standing there out of politeness.

He'd have to start dealing with some other garage now. It didn't matter. He knew all about cars, so nobody could put anything over on him. If they tried, he'd go somewhere else, until he found the right place. Nat Tillson wasn't the only honest guy in town who knew his business. To he'll with Tillson.

As he drove up to the house, he saw Ann coming down the walk with some fellow he had never seen before. For a minute, he hardly knew Ann. The kid really dishrt look had, older, really sort of smooth.

"Hello, Jin," she said, in a phony voice is though he hadbroken a leg or something and she was sorry. I'd like you to meet Gerry Weber."

Weher stuck out his hand and said, "I am very glad to meet vou."

He was a foreigner, and much older than Ann, older even than lim. Too old for Ann, that was for sure. She was only a kid. Where had she got hold of him, anyway? Jim shook his hand, "Where's mom?" he asked Ann "Upstairs. They've been wondering where you were."

She and Weber got into a '47 Pontiac that looked as if " had been kept up. If he was a guy who kept up his car, that was something in his favor. It sounded all right as they drave off, too. *

Jim went into the house. He father was sitting in the dining room with the paper, his back to the door. Jim pretended not to see him. He went upstairs and knocked on his mother's door.

She was sitting on the charse with a book. She put it down when he game in and said, "Hi. I was beginning to worry. I'm not supposed to say that, am I?"

"Nope grinned and sat down next to her feet. " fold you

I wouldn't be home until sooner or later. The trouble with mothers is they divays expect you sconer."

"The prouble with mothers is," she said, by the time they get used to one phase in their children, that one's finished and they've got to start all over again with the next."

"Like Ann," he said quickly. "I saw her outside. All of a sudden she looks like a dame. Who's the guy?"

Gerhardt? He's an Austrian, here permanently now. Ann shet him at camp. I think he's very attractive."

He's too old for her. He must be twenty-five. White happened to Bill, anyway?" He lit a cigarette for her and for him-Bill's a lot more her speed."

She said, "I've never known you to be so brotherly before. It's Enice. But I'm not worried about Ann " She took a long drag of ie cigarette. "It's you I'm worned about."

"Tree been sitting here thinking how to approach it. Rehears.

That's pretty pathetic, when you think of it. I'm sure my parents never rehearsed what they wanted to say to me."

So?" "Libby was here."

He tried not to move. "She was? What did she want?"

"You," his mother said. "But she's afraid she isn't going to get Vot. She says you're engaged to someone else."

He had been sure when his mother started that this was what as coming, and yet he wasn't prepared for it. Rage began to him, spreading all through his chest. There had been a time, not long ago, when hardly anything made him really angry, but that time was gone.

She had no right to tell you that. I told it to her in confidence.

he knew I didn't want anybody to know it yet."

Lis mother smiled a little. "I don't think you should biggoe Fig. Jim. She loves you. You can't expect a girl who loves you That around waiting for you to marry someone elasting because thought you didn't like Libby."

"I never said that, did 1?"

They were talking all around the thing, and he knew it was no use, because in the end they would have to get down to it.

"For didn't blive to say it. We could will. And now, all of a sudden, you and she are on the same side."

She rabbed her cigarette out slowly in the ash tray, her face turned away from him. He did not feel as if he were talking to his mother. She was just somebody he was arguing with, angly at, and he did not know why, because it wasn't she who had; done anything.

liked her once and thought she was scheming, and I don't any more, but she isn't important. If you've found someon clse you' can be happy with, that's all I'm interested in."

Dog to show, Im. Why are you shouting? Even you can't feel it's prying if I want to know something about the girl you expect to marry. I've never heard of her. I don't even know her name. She sounded as if she might cry. He couldn't remember ever seeing her cry. He couldn't imagine what it would be like; But she did not cry. "I'm worried because you've made such a secret of it. Why should it be a secret?"

Once he had thought of his mother and father as parents, as United Front, their separateness of no particular concern to him except in small ways. His father could throw a ball better and did not ask so many questions and was easier to get aroun: thank his mother, although he seemed tougher, because he listened to faces but his mother had to be charmed, and he could not always charm her. In anything important, though, they were a United Front. He knew now that it was not so, but as he tried to think how he was going to answer his mother he couldn't help still feeling that it was.

kept to exercit from you. If I had thought you wouldn't bay anything, have told you right away."

"Your and the transit your father to know, "that it?" When he didn't answer, she said, "What's the matter between you two, Jim? You were always so close. What's happened?"

"Nothing's happened. Nothing at all." He had to get her off that tack. "It's just that this isn't the kind of girl he'd understand."

"Parents often don't understand the people their children marry. Mine certainly didn't understand Tony. He was the son of a rich New York jeweler and they were small-town people without much money and no sophistication. But I didn't keep him away from them. I didn't make a secret of him." She looked at him, and now he knew it was his mother he was talking to. "Maybe you're afraid what we think of her will confirm some doubt in your own mind."

She thought he was still kid enough to be tricked that way. But it was no use anyway. She would tell his father what Labby had said and his father would know who the girl was. The only chance would be if he could keep her from telling him.

"You'd understand her," he said. "You'd like her, I wish !

could talk to you about her, about the whole thing."

She looked at him and then she looked out the window. He was sorry he had said that When she spoke, he felt relieved, though there wasn't any reason why be should.

"I wish you could, Jim," she said. "Your father and I always want to help you. You must know that."

He got up and walked across the room. He was going to sit the man on one of the beds, but the tailets covers were on, and nobody was supposed to sit on them. The covers were dark pink, rose, he supposed they called it. He had never noticed that before. Rose, with little ruffles. It was a hell of a room for a room to sleep in.

She's a girl at the office," he said in a loud voice. "Hallie

Brecd."

He heard his mother move on the chaise. Then dad knows

Res. That's just it." He went back and say next so her again sould see she was trying to be very casual, but the couldn't make it. If there was one thing his mother was not, it was casual. Hallie's a little older than I am and she's a hell of a clever, talented girl, so dad can't understand what she sees in me. He thinks there must be something more to it, that she must be after something. I don't know what."

"That's foolish. You're an attractive boy Any girl-" She broke off and laughed. "Maybe I'm a little projudiced. Let me talk to dad, if you won't. He usually makes sonse Let's get it all out in the open"

"I wish you wouldn't."

"Don't be silly, Jim. What do you want to do, clope? Spring it on him? He'd take that pretty hard. It wouldn't be pleasant for anybody."

"I'd chance it. Hallie won't do it, though,"

"Good for her. She must be all right. Done worry, everything" will work out." She reached up and Fissed him. "You don't smell like stale birds' nests any more. I wish you still did."

• He went to the door and then turned around "When are you going to talk to him?"

"I don't know. Probably tonight. You're not mad, are you?"

"No, I guess not."

He went into his own room because he did not want to go back downstairs again, past where his father was sitting, but when he got in there he didn't know what to do. He didn't want to lie down on the nearly made, unslept-in bed, and there was nothing on the desk that interested him, it wasn't really his toom any more, the way it had been before he went to college. There weren't any pennants on the walls, and on the desk no school books full of homework, none of the things he used to fool around with when he was supposed to be studying—they model planes of the chemistry set or the scrap book of pictures; of cars. Everything looked near and unused now, it was like at hotel form where he kept his clothes for a few roomths every year until he went back to the room he really had in, up in New-Hampshire with Wick.

Only Wilk, wouldn't be there any men; and he probably wouldn't be either. Nothing stayed the same. He would probably be in still another room comewhere with Hallie. He was damned though, if it was going to have any rose taffets ruffled bedspreads.

Fig. sat down at the desk and opened the bottom drawer. The scrapbook of cars was still there. Pasted on the last page was a magazine ad of a 1947 Studebaker, the first model that had been designed with a chassis like a bomber. Next to it was a crude drawing of a car with similar lines, and pencilled under it the capition, "Designed by James Halliday. December 28, 1945."

Not bad for a fourteen year old kid, he thought, beating the studebaker people to it. James Halliday, famous designer of cars, presents his new 1953 model, the Junmy H.

He slammed the book shut and dropped it in the waste basket. He wasn't fourteen any more. He was almost twenty-one. Almost twenty-one almost married almost in the army. James Aimost Halliday.

For some reason he thought of the only time he had ever cone in a ferris wheel. He had been about eight, but he would riever forget it. Some kid's mother had taken a bunch of them 20 Playland for the kid's birthday. They all wanted to go on the Servis wheel, so he had to go too. He was afraid of heights and be got dizzy very easily, but he had to go if all the others were going. He say in one of those little seats, and when it got all he way to the top, the wheel stopped and he say there with the waying in space. What frightened him was not the height the feeling that he enight full, but the idea of being there with nowhere all around him, of staying there and never isobeing any place again. He wanted to yell for his mother, he couldn't; he was cight years old. Anyway, he knew she partoo far away to hear him. He just sat there until the wheel to move again and took him down. Then he went politely hind a bush and threw up.

the heard his father come upstairs now, looking for his mother leard the hum of their voices. Maybe she was welling him, waiting for tonight. But in a minute his mother knocked lightly on the door, as if afraid he might be asleep, and spoke from the hall: . .

"Jim? We're going to have some sandwiches. Do you want something?"

"No. mom, thanks. I'm not hungry,"

He got into his dungaiers, and as soon as they were in the kitchen he went outside and began cleaning his car. He didn't: know what he was going to do when he was finished. He didn't know what to do with himself. Sunday was a hell of a day. He'd's have liked to go to the beach, but Libby might be there. He: should have stayed in New York, there was always something to do in New York, but he had felt he ought to come home. He's didn't know why, an engaged guy; he certainly didn't mave to report home like a little kid, and all he'd got for it was trouble.

Hallie was going to be sore as hell when she heard his father? knew. He had promised her he wouldn't say anything until she gave the word.

"I'll be able to tell when the time is ripe," she had said. "When I'm suze he'll open his arm, and say, 'Yes, my darling daughter,' I'll let you know."

"What if he never save it?"

"He will. I'm an awfully smart little girl."

Well he couldn't help it. He had had to tell Libby. He had owed her that. He couldn't belp if it she had gone and spilled it? to his mother. If Hallie was sore, she'd have to get over it She's was making it too important anyway, this thing of staying on?

the right side of his father. Who the hell cared?

When he had finished cleaning the car, he was so hot that he had to go to the beach. He couldn't keep staying away from places where Libby might be. After all, she might be anywhere He might meet her any time. Years from now, when he week o markied to Hallie, he might bump into her at the station. She would the him where he was going, and whether she could give him a lift, and he would thank hel and tell her gently that Hallie was waitiful for him in the car.

"Mom, I'm going down for a swim," he yelled; "I'll be back for dinner."

Of course he and Hallie would not be living anywhere around here, he thought, as he drove toward the beach. Hallie would never live any place but New York. She thought the suburbs were terrible.

"Have you ever seen the bars around Grand Central and Penn Station at five o'clock?" she said. "They're swarming with desperate commuters, tanking up so they'll have the courage to take the 5:28 back to their vegetable wives and their mortgaged houses and their bad-mannered kids."

York too, but that at least if you started out with ambition and curiosity and vitality, there was something to keep it going; it wouldn't all die for lack of nourishment the way it did in the suburbs.

"Heaven keep me," she said, 'from ever having no one better to outwit than a Japanese beetle!"

He tried to imagine being married to Hallie and living in New York, but it was the same every time he thought about it. All he could see was the two of them in hed. He could never get past that. Maybe he didn't want so. Maybe a man never wanted to. Hallie always said marriage was invented by women.

He drove around the beach parking lot twice before he found mispot for his car. When he got out on the sand he saw a lor of kids he knew, but he didn't feel like talking to tilem. He waved, and pretended he was going to meet somebody at the other end of the beach.

What would he have to talk about to them? Most of them were kids who had graduated from high school with him and were home from college the way he was, but he had nothing else in common with them any more. They were shricking and throwing sand at each other and chasing each other sinto the water the way they had done since they were freshmen in high school. They weren't thinking about getting married.

The splead his towel out on the sand and by back on it. All he could see was the sky. The terrible loneliness of that time on the ferris wheel came back to him again. He had only to sit up to see that there were other people near him. He had only to move a little to be among them. But it would not have done any good.

Now that he was here, he didn't know why he had come. He had never liked being alone, doing nothing, and the drive had cooled him off so that he had no particular desire for a swim any more. He could go home and get dressed and drive to New York. There would be something doing at Hallie's, or if not she would know where there was something doing. But he wouldn't go. He had told his mother he would be home for dinner

"Hello, Jim."

He was not startled, even though he had not heard her coming across the sand in her bare feet. He sat up and there she was, in two scraps of yellow bathing suit, looking at him with her mouth open a little and the hair falling across her forchead.

• "The kids told me you were here," she said. "I thought I come over a minute and say hello."

"I didn't see you with the others."

"I guess I was in the water. Have you been in the water?"
"Not yet."

"It's a little cold, but after you get in it's wonderful."

She was standing there and he was still sitting down. Why don't you sit here a minute?" He was embarrassed. He knew she was too. "I haven't seen you for a long time"

It was a dumh thing to say. She could have come right back at him on that one. But she satedown and began playing with the sand, letting it run through her fingers and watching it as if she had never seen sand before.

"I saw your mother this morning," she said.

"Yes, she told me."

"Did she tell you-? I mean, do you know what we talked about?"

He wasn't ready for this yet. He hadn't expected her to bring it up. You'd think she would have wante, to avoid it, if he didn't mention it. But he remembered that she had never liked waiting for anything, even something unpleasant. She always had to get things over with.

"I know what you talked about," he said.

She watched the sand pouring out between her fingers: "Are yoù mád?"

He thought of the rage he had telt when he first heard what she had done. But it was all gone now. It had lasted, he realized, only a minute.

"I guess not," he said. "Maybe it's just as well. They had to find out sooner or later."

"Are they going to try to stop you?"

What a question, he thought. What a question for her to ask him. He could just imagine Hallic asking anything that naive. He felt sorry for her because she didn't know any better than to give herself away like that, and he wished he could think of omething comforting to say to her.
"My father probably will," he said.

It was a while before she spoke. She stopped running the sand through her hands and began trying to build something with it, a sistle or something, but the sand was 100 soft and dry and it all just fell into a mound without any shape-his shouldn't have told you not to go into your father's office," the said then. "I didn't know it would make you so mad. It Wasn't really any of my business."

That was all right. That didn't have anything to do with anything."

"He was not sure now whether it had or not, but what differ-sence did it make? He had to say something.

Wit was only that I was afraid if you went into something you adn't care about," she-said, "you might be unhappy later and to hate me because you wouldn't have done it except for me. Rit I guess I had nothing to do with it."

didn't know what to say to that.

hat time you called up about a date for Wick, the said, "I will awfully mad and hurt, but I wish now I had some with you." When he still did not say anything she asked: "Did you get a date for him all right?"

"What?"

"For Wick. Did you get him a date that night?"

"Oh. Oh yes, I got him a date."

"How is Wick?"

"Fine," he said. "He's fine. You know Wick."

"Yes." She laughed, and he realized it was the first time she had laughed or even smiked "Wick's wonderful. There's nobody like him,"

Jim rolled over on his stomach and began to try to help her. make a sand castle. "A friend of mine thinks he's got a complex. You know, the way he talks and everything. This friend says he's got some reason for rejecting his education."

That sounds silly to me. Wick's so open and natural. I can't believe he has any complex. Of course I don't know much about it. I never studied psychology."

"It's surprising how little you can learn in college if you really try."

He had had fun, though. Now that he thought about it, he had had more fun in college than any other time in his life. Well, that was what his father had wanted, hadn't he? "You'll never have four years like this," he had said. "Get all you can out of it. There's much more there than what's in the books; Enjoy it, all." He had emoyed it. He couldn't help it is he couldn't make Phi Bete with his left hadd. Everybody couldn't, be that smart.

"I wish I had seen Wick," Libby said, but she seemed to be thinking of something else. She had stopped playing with this sand and turned her head so Jim could not see her face. After a minute she said, "Jim?"

"Yeah "
"Jim, that girl, the one you're—" He could hardly hear her;
and he learned closer and then wished he hadn't. "Jim, do youstay with her take last night, I mean." He voice got stronger and then laded out again. "Were you with her in New York last night-I mean, all night?"

He edged away from her, trying not to make it look noticeable. He felt as if he couldn't breathe. "For Chrissake!" he said.

"Well," she asked softly, "were you?"

"For Chrissake, Libby, that's a hell of a question. Who ever beard of a girl asking a question like that?"

"That means yes," she said. She sat up, pulling her knees up under her and hugging them with her arms. He was afraid she was going to look at him, but she kept her eyes on the ocean. "Jim," she said, and stopped. "Jim, would it have been better—between us, I mean—if I had—?"

"Shut up, Libby. Will you please shut up?"

"I would have, if I'd have thought it would be better."

He got to his feet, the sand spraying from his body. "I'm going in for a swim," he said. "You go back to the kids. You go back. Please—" He had to clear his throat and say it again. "Please don't be here when I come out."

"All right," she said. "I'm sorry, Jim."

What was he trying to do, keep him dangling? Did he think he was punishing him, or something? All the way in on the train. Jim had waited for him to say something, even if it was only that he wanted to see him in his office when they got in, but he hadn't said a damp thing. He had read the paper the way he always did, giving half-of it to Jim, and made a couple of comments on the news and on the advertising and talked to a man he knew across the aisle.

When they got out of the elevator of the office, his father said, it told Stillman to show you how to make a layout, it he gets a stillnee today. I thought you might like that. You used to do a little sketching, didn't you?"

What was he trying to do, show what a fine, generous, under standing guy he was before he began slapping him down?

"Just cars," Jimesaid.

"Well, that's all right."

The morning went by without any word from either Stillmanor his father, Jim made a file of the man-with-the-sling campaign. The poor bastard's arm was still out of commission after all these weeks. Esquire had run a cartoon in which he came without his sling to visit a girl in black underwear and she asked him how he dared call on a lady when he wasn't properly dressed.
It was funny the way an idea like that could carch on. It didn't amount to anything, as far as Jim could see, but it had made Culveston whisky sales jump, and it hadn't hurt the Halliday.
Advertising Agency a bit. Anybody ought to be able to think up an idea as good as that.

At lunch time, his father sent in word that he was ried up and that Jim should go ahead. They hardly ever had lunch together, because his father usually spent that time with clients, but Jim was always, supposed to wait for a message

He walked up to Whitney's. For a while he had tried eating at the places with counters and booths, fancy-named to fit the neighburhood, Hot Dog He iven and Hamburger Paradise and Bacon and Egg Bistro, but after standing for almost half an hour one day to get a stool to sit on with the next customer breathing down his back, he returned to Whitney's. No matter how crowded it was, Max always got him a table in a few minutes, and he could sit there as long as he liked. In the beginning he had thought that people were looking at him, but nobody us ked at anybody in Whitney's. They were all too busy making big publishing and advertising deals over the martinis and the devialled crabs.

Jim was eating his dessert when he raw Hallie come in with a man. They sat at a table not far from him, Hallie with her back to him. He tried to remember whether he had ever seen the man before, maybe at one of her parties. He was pretty suro he hadn'te It must he business, he decided, or it could even be a relative. He didn't look like a relative, though, and she wasn't really at the stage yet where she went out for business lunches. It is not that to be something like that. She kin of Jim ate at Whiteney's all the time, and she wouldn't pick this place to come with some other guy if it wasn't all okay.

The thing to do was to go over there and say hello, but he didn't go. Instead, he sat and watched them. This man with her was no young guy, but he acted as if he were. He kept smiling and showing his teeth and looking hearty. Something about him reminded Jim of Lex, or of the way he thought Lex must have been ten years ago. They each drank two martinis and then they ordered, but when the tood came they only picked at it. Most of the customers at Whitney's only picked at the food, though the good food was one reason they went there. They were too busy talking to eat.

Jim wished he could hear what those two were talking about, but Whitney's was sound proofed and you could hear only the people right nearby. He didn't know why he sat there watching them, what he was looking for. All he could see was the back of Hallie's head and the guy leaning toward her and showing his teeth. He could have been telling her about AAA ratings or asking for the key to her apartment.

When he couldn't stand it any more, he got up and were over. Hallie looked at him without any particular surprise and introduced him. The guy's name was Mullins or Miller or something. He said:

"Not the Mr. Halliday?" and flashed the teeth to show he knew better.

"This is Jim," Hallie said. "The son."

"And hear, of course," Mullins or Miller said. What a stupid

"What do you do, Mr. Milkins?" Irm asked him,

"Millar," Hallie said. "M-i-l-l-a-r. Reddington and Millar. You inow, Jun."

He would not have known two months ago, but he knew now. decidington and Millar was the agency that handled the United chacco account, one of the biggest accounts in advertising the layer eiger ettes, Earl of Chichester pipe obaccin. The man in the layerness cape on television, lighting he character in a tog. saying with a British accent, "But it's clear there's no smoke like Trafalgar."

"Have you had your lunch?" Millar asked. "Will you join us?"
Before Jim could answer, Hallie said, "He can't. He has to get back to the office." She gave him a look he didn't understand, a kind of sad look. "I'll see you later, Jim."

He would have been angry, but the look stopped him. All the way back to the office he tried to figure out what it had meant, what was going on. That guy Millar, whom he had thought was an ass, was a long way from it. The Boy Wonder of Advertising, they called him. At thirty-five, if you had the United Tobacco account, you were not only a Wonder but a Boy. That was Hallie's kind, a guy like that.

He stopped at the switchboard and asked the receptionist whether there was any message from his father. She said that there was not, that Mr. Halliday had been tied up for the past hour with a Mr. Nye.

The F.B.I. man. He had been here at the office once before, and up at the house three or four times. You would have thought Lex was trying out for at least Secretary of State. Ne had had a couple of long sessions with other numbers of the family behind closed doors, but he had questioned Jim for only a few minutes once about whether he knew Mrs. Dellett, and whether he had ever bumped into her older son, who had griduated from Dattmouth a year ago. Jim had told him he had seen Mrs. Dellett. He had never heard of her son. What the Dellett woman had to do with Lex, Jim could not imagine. Note had the wrong guy, he thought.

He went back to passing up the scrap book and waiting. When the phone on the desk finally rang, it was not his father but Hallie. She asked him if he would come in to her office a minute. For the first time, the did not bother to say, in case anyone was listening in that she had some work for him. That was okay with Jim, it would all be out in a little while anyhow, as soon it his father are around to it.

She was maing at her desk with everything neatly arranged in front of her, the way it always was. He started over to her, but she looked up at him without smiling and he sat down instead.

"What's up?" he asked. When she did not answer right away, he said, "That guy, Millar. What were you doing there with him?"

"Discussing a job," she said

"What?"

"A job. He asked me once if I'd like to work for him. I was reminding him of it."

Jim thought a minute. Then he got up and leaned across the desk toward her. "Sure. Why didn't we think of it before?" he said. "That's the answer. You get a job somewhere else, and you don't have to give a damn about my father. Why didn't we-?"

"Sit down," she said, and she had that look on her face he had seen in Whitney's. "Sit down, Jim."

"All right, I'm sitting down."

She began doodling with a pencil. He had never seen her do that before. One of the things he had always noticed about her was how still she kept her hands, not fusing with her hair or picking at her face like other girls he knew.

"Your father talked to me this morning," she said.

"What? What about?"

"He asked me why I wanted to marry you."

It took him a minute. First he heard the words, and then he seemed to see them, as if on a screen "Oh," he said. "Oh, that's the way he's playing it. Not straight out to me, the way you'd expect. Sneaking around to you, trying to—"

"Jim, listen." Her voice had changed. She put down the pencil. "I told him I loved you, and he asked me if I loved you enough to marry you even if neither of us had a job here any more."

"The son of a bitch," Jim said "He wouldn't-

"Maybe he wouldn't. Maybe he was bluffing," she said. "I tried to outbluff him. I said I loved you enough to marry you no matter what happened. You have no idea how sweet I was. But he didn't buy. He said I had a future in advertising, and he'd recommend me highly, giving me plenty of credit for my part in the man-with-the-sling campaign. This is if I leave, of course, and forger you. He wasn't explicit about the alternative." She smiled a little. "Corny, yes? Not much of a switch on the old routine where papa writes out a check and the heroine tears it up and throws it in his face."

He started to speak without knowing what he intended to say, but she was going on.

"Only 1 didn't throw it in his face. Chapter Twenty-Six, Heroine Reveals True Nature. Damn you, Jim," she said suddenly in a different voice, "don't sit there looking twelve years: old. Don't you know what I'm trying to tell you?"

"No," he said. "No Don't talk like that. Chapter Twenty-Six. Don't be so clever. Everybody's so Goddam clever. Why don't you come wraight out with it?"

She nodded. "It's easier to be clever," she said, "but I'll try, When I told your father I loved you, that was true. You won't believe it now, so just file it away and take it out some other time, maybe ten years from now." She looked at him and then turned so she was facing the window. "I told you once I could go far in this business if I got the breaks. When I met you, I thought you were one of the breaks. When you wanted to marry me, I thought if it could be played right, this might be the jackpot, not only the business but a boy, I was crazy about too. Well, it wasn't played right."

He stood up. "If you loved me-"

"I know," she broke in. "I know what you think. But it isn'te' always like that. There isn't a standard test for it, the way they tell you. You can't say I don't love you at all because I don't love you enough." She put out her hand and he thought she was going to out him, but then she let it fall back on the desk. "That's all. We could keep on talking about it, but it wouldn't do any good. That's all there is, lamb."

He felt allif he had been running too fast. "You're a bitch," he said, but he had only enough breath to sound the last word.

"Yes," she said. "Yes, I suppose so."

He stood there a minute, trying to think of something else to say. Once in Junior High School he had seen the tip of a boy's finger cut off by a power saw. The boy had yelled once and then stared at his bloody finger and at the saw, wondering what to do next. In one second it had happened and was over, and the boy had been unable to believe that was all there was to it.

"You'll be sorry," Jim said. "You'll be Goddam sorry."

He yanked the door open, but it closed slowly and softly behind him. In the corridor he looked up and down, trying to think where to go. The only place he could think of was the Men's Room, and even there somebody might come in and talk. When he was a kid, he had never liked playing hide-and-seek. He had never liked being "It," with everybody running away and leaving him, or one of the hiders, crouching somewhere alone. He had always been attailed of being alone, and now he didn't know how or where.

Stillman came along as he stood there. 'Oh, Jim," he said, "I was looking for you. They wanted me to show you something about layouts.

"I can't now. I have--I can't."

"Oh, come along," Stillman said pettishly. "I'll tell whoever else you're doing anything for that this has first priority." He glanced "at Hallie's door. "Who is it, Miss Breed?"

."No," Jim said. "No. that's okay. Let's go.""

He followed Stillman into his office and watched while the old man pinned paper to his drawing board, and he listened to the fussy, explaining voice, but he neither saw nor heard. The numbress was leaving him and his blood felt hot, as after frost hite. Lamb, he thought. Silly Goddam lamb. And his father had known it all along and knew it now and was waiting to rub it in, the son of a bitch.

"There's as much satisfaction in it," Stillman was saying.

"Really as much."

[&]quot;What?"

"In craftsmanship. Haven't you been listening?" Stillman stepped away from his drawing-board and squinted at his sketch. "Craftsmanship. I wasted half my life despairing because I lacked the spark to be a great artist. Who's to say the craftsman is anything less? In my way I'm a great craftsman, a great technician. I never should have felt I was wasting my talents. Isn't that a beautiful layout?"

He waited for Jim to answer and Jim said that it certainly was. "All right, then. Why isn't it as admirable an accomplishment as a painting that hangs in the Metropolitan?"

Jim said that he didn't know why it wasn't,

"The answer is that of course it is as admirable. Each is beautiful in its own way, each the superior work of a particular kind of talent, one Craftsmanship, one Art, yet each partaking of both. Correct?"

"Yes," Jim said, "I think you have a point there"

He didn't know what the old guv was talking about. It sounded the same to him as some of the talk at those parties, like gobble-dygook. Hell, maybe it was maybe it was all gobbledygook, and he could have sounded as clever as any of them.

"Here," Stillman said, handing him a pencil, "try it yourself now. Anything you want Just try to remember what I've told you."

Jim took the pencil and began to sketch, not with broad, light strokes like Stillman, but diagong the pencil into the paper. He drew the outline of a car, with a figure compled under the front wheels. The figure could have been a man. It could, have been a girl.

"Where's your copy going?" Stillman asked irritably. "Where's your head? How do I know what it is?" He peered at the sketch again. "An institutional tob, I suppose Automobile, insurance? Well, don't make it that gruesome, with the victim tight under the wheels. If it's too gruesome, nebody will look at it. Just show an outstretched hand, or a childle legs with a doll of a teddybear flext to them. Pity is what you're trying to get, pity and fear, not horror." He was tevising Jim's sketch as he talked. "See what I mean? Now you have something beau-tiful"

Jim looked at the layout. Under the rough drawing, Stillman had blocked in the words: If YOU Were the Driver of this Car... What was so tough about that? Jim thought. You drew a lousy picture, and it turned into an ad for automobile insurance.

"That's great, Mr. Stillman," he said. "I don't know how you do it."

Stillman cleared his throat. "Well," he said. "Well, I've been at it a long time. Would you like to try another one?"

"I'd love to, Mr. Stillman, but I can't right now. I have to see my father about something."

He went out before Stillman could say anything. He wasn't going to wait until the son of a bitch got good and ready to rub it in. He wasn't going to sit around and wait.

"Is my father still busy with Mr. Nye?" he asked the recep-

She said that Mr. Nye had left some time ago. She smiled ap him as she said it, and it looked like more than an office smile. That's right, he thought. Play up to the silly Goddam lamb and you may end up owning the hus.ness.

His father's desk chair was rolled over to the window and he was sitting there looking out. He swivelled around when he heard Jim's step.

"Hello, Jim," he said. "I was expecting you." He sounded like a character in a whodunit. "Sit down."

"In the contour chair is Jim asked pleasantly,

His father blinked. "Wherever you damn please."

"I guess I'll stand. I won't be here long. I'd just like to know why you didn't tell me what you had in mind, why you had to go sneaking behind my back—" This wasn't what he had meant to say. His voice was shaking and he sounded childish. He hadn't meant to sound childish. It was in his mind one way, but it came out another. "That's all-I'd like to know," he haid.

"All right," his father said. "All right, Jim. I'll try to overlook anything you say. You've been kicked in the teeth. I know how you feel."

He could be nice now, nice and understanding. He had showed what a clever guy he was and what a fool Jim was and so he could be nice. He knew how Jim felt. The hell he did. How did anybody know how anybody else felt?

"Please skip the sympathy," he said. "Please just answer my question."

"All right. What was your question? Why didn't I tell you what I was going to do? Because it would have done no good. I tried to talk to you about Hallie once. 'I his time I thought I'd better act on my own, before it was too late.' He looked at Jim, and it was the way everybody was always looking at his lately, as if he had broken a leg. "Does that answer you?"

"You're pretty clever," Jim said. "I'm not as clever as you are."
"What clock that mean."

He didn't know what it meant. Everything he wanted to say, scenned to be dissolving. "You didn't have to stage it like this. I'd have found out about her."

"Maybe. I wasn't willing to take the chance. You're my son."
"Hearts and flowers."

"All right, Jim. All right. Let's leave it that I had to interfere, because something like this happened to me once and I think enough of you not to want it to happen to you."

Jim raised his eyelsows. You mean you weren't always so clever?"

"It's easy to be clever when someone else is involved. when a girl attracts you, of course you want to believe she's in love; with you. It doesn't take much to convince you. As a matter of fact," he said, "I think Hallie cures for you in her way."

"We were talking about you."

"Yes, I think my girl cared for me too, but she also cared more for other, things. That's why I recognized Halle. You could have married her and maybe even made out all right, but I didn't think It was good enough for you. I want you to have something as good as I've had."

Jim's hands were cold. He held them together behind his back, "You mean a wife who goes all out for you and a girl on the side too? You mean as good as that?"

His father looked out of focus, as if he had moved away to the end of the room. But he was still sitting at the window. Nothing had changed.

"I'm trying to keep my temper, Jim. I'm trying to be patient You'd better explain that."

"Darling," Jim said. "How do you like necking under the back steps, darling?"

"What?"

"Nancy, darling."

His father got white. It took him a while to speak. "Who has been talking to you, Jim?"

"Ann."

"Ann? Ann who?"

"Your daughter, Ann. She saw you, the two of you. She heard you call her darling."

"My God." His father sat there a minute. "That was years ago, five years, six. Why now? Why does it come out now?"

"Does that make any difference?"

His father did not seem to be listening. He was frowning down at his knees. "Nye" he said. "Nye and his damn questions. All right." He leaked at Jim. "All right, I got tight at a party and kissed Nancy Dellett. It's too had Ann had to see it A kid like that wouldn't understand. But you're a man, Jim You know these things happen."

"Darling?"

"All right. You know how that is You get carried away. He wished his father would not keep saying all right, because it wasn't. Nothing was all right. Here he was and there was his father, sitting there explaining to him, the way he himself had often sat explaining to his father. It made him feel sick. The anger was going now and the sickness taking its place.

"No," he said. "You were sleeping with her."
His father did not move for a minute. Then he rolled his chair back behind the desk and folded his arms across the top. "All right," he said. "I don't think you know that. I don't think you could know it. But if I deny it, you won't believe me anyway. Maybe, instead, I can make you understand."

"Sure. You'll make with a lot of clever words. When you're all through you'll still be a-"

"Let's leave out the name calling. That won't get us anywhere. And don't be so damn self-righteous. How do you know what follies you'll commo in the next twenty-five years? You're off to a pretty good start already, making a damn fool of yourself over a girl who— I'm sorty. I shouldn't have said that." He sighed. "Sit down, Jim. Let's start over."

Jim sat in one of the straight chairs. His legs were too tired to stand any more.

"I'd like to ask you something first," his father said. "Is this what's been rating you these past weeks? Why didn't you come out with it long ago?" When Jim did not answer, he said, "I suggest that you're using this as an excuse for an antagonism you had no valid teason to express before—an antagonism that has nothing to do with this at all."

"Antagonism, hell," Jim said. "I always thought you were a great guy."

His father blinked the way he had before, and looked for a pencil. He picked one up and began jabbing at his memo pad. "It's possible to feel that, and at the same time to feel resentment. You know You studied psychology."

"Studied isn't the right word. I passed an exam. I aven't got your head for that kind of stuff."

His father looked at him and smiled a little. "See? That's what I mean."

How did they get here? Jim thought. How did they get around to this? An hour ago Hallie had told him he was all washed up, and here he was listening to his father talk about antagonism. He felt as if he had taken a wrong turn in one of those thates at Playland, and now he would never get out.

"Everybody's so God lam clever," he said. Had he just suid that? "Everybody's a psychologist. All I know is, you talk about what a great marriage you've got, and all the time you've been sleeping around. Do I have to have some other reason for--?"

"Shut up, Jim, and listen. I haven't been 'sleeping around,' as you put it. This was one incident, six years ago, that lasted for three or four months. I wish it hadn't happened, but it did, and all I can do is try to make you see why."

Everything was turned around, and now Jim could never again explain why he had spent so much money, or why his marks were not better, because they would both think of this.

"You don't have to," he said "Skip it."

For the first time, his father looked angry, "It's too late for that now. Shut up and listen." He sighed again. "I mentioned before that I'd had an experience like yours with Hallie. Well, the girl was Nancy Dellett. I was engaged to her before I met your mother, and she broke it off when she had a chance to marry a man with money. I never saw her again until six years ago, when—well, when someone who knew us both told her a needed a receptionist, and she came to apply for the job. She said her son was almost grown and she was sick of doing nothing. She also said that she had learned how little happiness material things could bring I should have thrown her out on her tail, but I didn't."

He lit a regarette. It seemed to Jim that it was taking him a longer time than necessary. His hands furpibled in his pockers, and he struck the march three times before it has

"I was forty-one," he said. "I had been married seventeen years. But I was a young man. I looked young. I felt young 'He started to smile at Jim, and finen changed his mind. "Nothing is so reassuring to a young man of forty-one as an attractive woman. And this one had thrown me over when I was twenty-two. I wanted to thow her what a mistake she had made. Be sides, I felt she owed me something."

"What about mom?"

His father turned his hands palm up and then let them fall down again on the desk. "I don't know how to answer that," I'v said. "But everything was the same between your mother and me and she never knew. She might have been hurt, and it doesn't seem possible to me now that I could have taken that risk, but as it turified out she wasn't." He frowned. "I haven't made much of a case for myself, have I? But it's all over now, all over a long time ago, and there was never anything else in twenty-three years." He fumbled for another cigarette. Jim fought the impulse to light it for him "It's a tunny thing, when you think of it, that I never had to account to your mother, but I'm accounting to you."

Jim stood up, "If you don't mind, I'd like to get out of here. I'd like to take the rest of the day off."

"I don't blame you. Go shead."

He started to leave, but his father stopped him before he got to the door. "Jim-"

"Yes?"

"Do you still hate my guts?"

"I don't know. I don't know if I ever did. I don't know. I just want to get the hell out of here."

"All right," his father said. "All right Jim."

"Missa Halliday, you got a no good grass seed. Dis grass seed, she never grow," Patsy said. "I buy grass seed, plant right away before leaves fall, you get fine good lawn next year."

Zelda kept the back screen door between herself and : dark, muscular little man. 'There's nothing wrong with that grass seed," she said. "It's a good brand. I paid $1.75 a pound for it."

"My seed better," he said. "Costs one eighty-five, but much better. Dis seed you got, she grow only crab grass and a dande lion."

It probably would, too. Zelda thought, if she insisted on his using it. He wanted to buy the same seed and make a profit on it, and it she refused to let him he would see to it that her lawn failed to thrive. Why didn't she get iid of the blackmailing little monster? But their first gardener had got drunk and cut the heads off all the peonies.

"If I can take back the seed I bought-"

"Nonsense," Marcia's voice said behind her. "Patsy wouldn't want to put you to all that trouble." She pushed open the door, nudging Zelda as she passed and went down the steps to where the gardener stood. "I'll bet you can make it grow. You look to me like a man who could make anything grow anywhere."

She stood smiling down at him, splendlid in her pearl trimmed black cashmere sweater and made-to order black slacks, but he was not awed. He grinned at her, his sly monkey face full of delight. This was his idea of a woman, Zelda thought

"Sure," he said. "I'm first-class fine gardener."

"I can tell that," Marcia said. "I'll bet you can take these very seeds and grow a lawn that will make people stop and look and ask who the Halliday's gardener is."

His grin seemed glued to his face, yet Zelda could not recall that she had ever seen him smile before. "Dat's good a idea. Lake advertise, huh?"

"Exactly. Pretty sharp of you to tlank of it."

He winked, "Sure I'm pietry sharp fells. Well, so long"

He moved off toward his truck, swaggering on his bandy legs, and Zel-la talled after him, "Aren'r you going to seed the lawn now, Patsy?"

"Be back. Gotta buy fertilizer. Extra fine lawn need extra fine fertilizer."

• Marcia came back into the house, laughing. "He's wonderful." she said. "I love him."

"He'll only make it up on the Tertilizer."

"I know. What of it? Even meat for spaghetti sauce is a dollar a pound."

Zelda smiled. Marcia always made things and people better than they were. In a few minutes she had changed a millen contiving, no-gold gardener into a whimsical character.

"I wish you could stay and manage him," Zelda said." "He won't do anything for me."

"Yes, he will. Try not talking to him in that special tone you use, as if he were deaf or dull witted."

"I didn't know I did."

Marcia sat down at a card table in the living room, where a half-solved jigsaw puzzle was set up, and began trying to fit pieces into spaces where they obviously would not fit. Lex had brought it to her a week ago, and she had been working on it ever since, with more enthusiasm than skill. He was always bringing her silly gifts, dime store jewelry and games and children's toys, and she wore and used them all. She had gone to a party one night with a twenty-five cent gift jun, emblazoned with red glass stones, fastened to her Mainbocher dress.

Zelda sat down and helped her with the puzzle. Immediately she was back in Framington. She and Marcia were sitting on the parlor floor playing parchesi. It was draughty, because no matter now anadi coal was poured into the furnace, the warmth escaped through the meandering, high ceilinged rooms. Rain—why was rain so often a part of memor es2—spilled over the leaf-elogged gotters and sloshed against the windows. In another part of the house the boxs, who were not allowed free run of the parlor, made the weird inhuman cries of young males at play, faintly, behind a closed door

Although now the September sun shinted warmly through the windows. Zelda could feel the chilt of the Framington shouse and spiell the slight musticess that clung to the thick coholstery and the heave dripes most of the very. She could smear chicken roasting and apple probability. There as no exhaust fat to foster the impression that total appeared on the table without any such plebian process as cooking.

Marcia looked up, with a perchesiscounter in her hand, and said, "I'm hungry."

"You're always hunger. What's the use of pestering them to let you go out with boys if you're going to get so fat no boys will like you anyhow?"

"Marha saws nice boys like vou for your character."

Zelda, bending over the jigsaw puzzle in her warm hing room in Westchester, laughed. "Nice boys like you for your character."

"What?" Marcia tried to fit a piece of sky into the bottom of the puzzle. "What did you say?"

"Nice boys like you for your character. Don't you remember? We were playing parches.—"

"Parchesi? I haven't played parchesi in thirty years,"

"That's when this was. Back home. I told you not to eat so much if you wanted the boys to like you, and you said mama told you nice boys like you for your character."

Marcia laughed. "It sounds like mama. I wonder if she really believed it."

"Of course she did."

"What ever made you think of it all of a sudden?"

How could you know? It was all part of you, part of what you were. If she and Marcia had not played parches that after noon in Framington, if it had not been raining, if there had been roast beef instead of chicken, if they had not said what, they did say, everything might have been different.

"Was it my svelte rigure that reminded you?" Marcia looked down at herself. "I know I shouldn't dress like this. It's for the spirit instead of the flesh."

"You always look wonderful."

"Do 12 That's good. Because I couldn't stand one of those little numbers in menopause blue."

They giggled together as if they were still little girls playing parchesi. Other relationships were always changing, the balance shifting, but she and Marcia stayed the same. In the end, every thing between them went back to Framington and the Studie.

"I wonder how Lex is making out," Marcia said. She pushed away from the table and lit a cigarette. "I can see him in Washington, pacing in some outer office like an expectant father. He's been patient a long time for this job. I hope they're going to tell him something definite."

"They will. Nye's all finished. There can't be anything else to wait for."

Marcia watched the smoke sifting through a shaft from the lowering sun. "Poor Lex."

"Poor Lex? I don't think so."

"Yes. He should have been a guardsman or a knight or something. You know, something resplendent, with only a little light duelling or tourneying to take care of now and then, and all the ladies of the court to choose from."

Zelda got up and tearranged some dahlus in a bowl on the piano. It was a beautiful piano, but it was only an ornament now. Both children had taken lessons on it for brief periods, but since neither of them had shown any interest or talent, it had seemed useless to continue. Nobody could be popular any more by playing the piano, when Horowitz and Rubinstein as J Erroll Garner entertained for nothing in everyone's living room.

"I'd like to see Nye's report," Zelda said. "I'd like to know what he was stying to find out all these weeks."

"I have a pretty good idea," Marcia said. "Paula Thayer called upe up this morning. She just got back from Nantocket."

Zelda poked at the dahlias. There was something so gracious ladyish about arranging flowers, but she was not really very good at it. It required a kind of small-muscle patience that she had never learned.

"I can't imagine that Paula Thayer's gossip could be very instructive, 'she said

"It was, though, Very instructive."

It would scene unnatural for Zelda to refrain from askir ξ what Paula Thiser had said, but she did not ware to ask it. She was not ready to discuss with Marcia now the paternity of Nancy Dellett's son. When she would be ready, what would make her ready, she did not know, but she was not ready now.

"Was that Tony's car?" She went to the window. "I'm sure I heard the car."

"I dithi'e hear anything."

"I'm stige I heard it." She went to another window at the side, overlooking the driveway. "Well, I don't see it, but I was sure I heard it. Good heaven, in a couple of weeks Jim will be back at school and I'll be driving Tony to and from the station again. The old routine. It doesn't seem possible the summer's almost over."

"It's been quite a summer."

"Yes," Zelda said, "it has. It's been quite a summer." She was still at the window, watching the empty driveway. "It will be awfully quiet around here soon. Jim and Ann both away. It doesn't seem possible. Ah, here's the car now!" She moved back into the room. "Jim's at the wheel again. He always used to do the driving, but Tony's been doing it most of this summer. There's some significance in that, but I don't know what it is. Some obscure masculine byplay."

Tony and Jim came in together. She had never before been as aware of the resemblance between them. Perhaps it was because they were so similarly dressed. Tony's suit was blue and Jim's oxford gray, or charcoal gray as they called it now, but they were tailored exactly alike in the unmistakable Brooks ready to wear-imitating made-to-measure manner. They both wore white button down shirts and different versions of ties that were load and yet gentlemanly. Jim was better-looking, of course and his hair was thick and curly, as Tony's bad been once but was no more.

"Hellor you two," she said, and kissed them both. "Tough day, at the office?"

Tony kept his arm around her. This was something new. He had even taken to kissing her quite warmly in front of the others. It was altogether out of character, and there was no use trying to figure out what it might mean because the possibilities were too numerous.

"Not bad. Your son game up with a pretty fair layout today." He did not quite look at Jim as he said this "Stillman's been working with him for a week or so and he thinks he has ability "

Jim smiled at Zelda. "What else would Stillman say The boss's son always has ability. Hi, Aunt Marcia. How's the puzzle coming?"

"Lousy."

Marcia grinned up at him, and Zelda felt a wrench of jealousy. There was a relationship between them that she had never been able to achieve with Jim. She supposed no mother could, because part of it was certainly sexual, as was part of Marcia's relationship with any male, even Patsy, the gaidener. But there was something else. Zelda could never have said "Lousy" to him the way Marcia did, without sounding as though she were consciously talking on his level.

"I must be dull-witted," Marcia said. "Every piece I pick up always looks like the one I'm trying to find."

Jim patted her on the head. "You're not dull-witted, auntie, just optimistic. Well. I'll go up and shower. How soon's dinner, mom?"

"Do I ever know? When Rena sees fit to bring it on Three quarters of an hour An hour."

She trateful him go up the stairs with that easy, bounding grace that could never be imitated by anyone who was not young, and she thought how good it was that he had another year of college. But such a short time ago she had thought how good it was that he had four years to go, then three ...

"What's the matter, Babe?" Tony asked. He still had his arm around her

"Why? What should be the matter?"

"The way you were watching Jim."

"Oh, I don't know" She moved away from him and took a cigarette from the table next to Marcia. I was think, ig he's changed this summer. He never used to say things him b'att. You're not dull-witted, just optimistic." That's rather clever."

"Yes." For some reason Tony did not sound pleased "People get clever around advertising agencies." He turned to Marcia. "Have you heard from Lex?"

"No," she said. "I told him to call me if he needed moral support It's not easy, at his age, to be waiting outside someone's office with his hat in his hand. But he hasn't called, so maybe everything's fine."

Zelda west up with Tony while he changed. When they passed

Ann's empty room, he asked where she was and Zelda told him she was out with Gerhardt.

"She's been seeing a lot of him, hasn't she?" he said. "What happened to the other one? Bill?"

"He still comes around sometimes. I don't know why she bothers with him at all, when she has Gerhardt. It's too bad in a way that she's going to college just now, when an attractive bey like this is interested in her."

"Ann's only a child. There will be lots of attractive boys"

"I don't know. It isn't the way it used to be. They don't play the field any more. How many can you cover, when you take them one at a time?"

Tony had his shirt off and was looking in the closet for his robe. "You don't have to worry about Ann," he said. "She'll be all right."

Whenever they talked about Ann, it always en led like this with Tony saying that she would be all right. He knew nothing about it, really. He had no idea what it was like to be a gul of seventeen at the beginning of a new love affair. At least if she had no other access to Ann's secret life, she had had the experience to imagine it.

"I don't think she's happy." Zeld) said. "I don't think things are going well for her. You know, she isn't as stolid as you believe."

Tony came out of the closer without his prousers on, the rook over his arm. 'What makes you'think I believe she's stolid?"

"You're-always so cure she's going to be all right."

He laughed. "That's a fine commentary, that is. The stolal shall inherit the earth." The robe on his arm was a bright red and-yellow plaid. Twenty years ago he would never have worn a robe like that. "Did I ever tell you she wants to be a teacher?" "Who?"

"Who! Who are we talking about? Ann, of course."

"No," she said, "you never told me that." Did everyone know more about her children than she did? "How do, you harw" "She said so once when we took a walk together," I wouldn't put too much stock in it. She'll change her mind a dozen times."

He started for the bathroom and she followed him to the door. "Tony," she said, "Tony, is Jim all right? Do you think he's getting over that girl?"

"Must we have all this now-this-this Children's Hour-before cocktails?"

"What other time is there? There are always people around, and when we come up at night we're too tired."

"Yes," he said. "All right." He smiled and kissed hei, though it did not seem an occasion for a kiss. "Jim's okay. I can't help thinking he was a little relieved about the whole thing, once the first shock wore off. How could he have expected to get married anyhow? He's about as ready for marriage as Tiny Tim."

"He always thinks he has to marry every girl he likes, I think it's kind of sweet."

"Yes, it is," Tony s. id. "Yes, it is kind of sweet."

"You know what I mean I realize it was hard on you," she said. "Things don't seem as bad between you two, though, as they did before. A little strained, maybe, that's all. You haven't found out yet why he acted like that toward you have you?"

But he was in the shower, the water splatting against the plastic curtain, and he could not hear here

She sat down on the chaise and lit a cigarette. When the summer was over and everything was normal again, she would really have to cut down on her smoking. It was getting so she was hardly ever without a cigarette in ner hand.

Only when would everything be normal? She wance even sure what she meant by normal. People were always saying that these were not normal times, but she did not think they new what they meant either. What were normal times? When settlers were being scalped by Indians or women were dying in droves of childbed fever and children of diptheria or when workers spent sixty hours a week at their jobs?

She supposed what she really meant was not so much normal as settled. When things were settled, she would cut down on her smoking. Tony, I want to cut down on my smoking, so please tell me whether you and Nancy Dellett have been carrying on an affair all these years. Please tell me whether you and she have a son. It could just as well be you as Lex, couldn't it? Please let me know, so I can cut down on my smoking.

He came out of the bathroom in his robe, and she moved over so he could lie down on the chaise. He reached for her hand and closed his eyes and they stayed that way, not speaking.

Suppose she were to ask him now, quietly, as they sat here. However he answered, she would know, in the first instant of surprise. She would see his eyes flash open and the color leave his face. For that instant he would be exposed and helpless, and once she had seen him that way, whatever happened, nothing could be the same again.

"We clinched the Roundtree liquor account today," he said, with his eyes still closed. "I believe you're looking at a successful man. Mrs. H."

She smiled. "You haven't forgorten that."

"How could 1?"

They had been married in April and at the end of August he had left his job with Farnham. Cropsey and Wall and opened his own agency. There had been so much money around, enough, it seemed, to make everyholdy rich. When Tony got his third new account in less than six weeks, he came home with a bottle of champagne and announced, "I believe you're looking at a successful man, Mrs. H.". That had been early in October, 1929.

"Do you remember the milk hottles" she asked hirranow. "Milk hortles?"

"When we didn't have carfare to get to work. Don't you remember? That man at the dairy—what was his name?"

Tony's eyes were open now. 'Greenberg," he said "No, Green stein. I remember. We'd try to act as if we just wanted to get rid of the bottles, is if getting the deposit back was incidental"

"I always thought he knew, though. He treated us so genfly."

"Maybe he was just a gentle man. Well," Tony said, "I suppose I'd better get dressed and go down and make the conkluls." He sighed. "I'd rather stay here alone with you."

"I'm glad. That's a nice way to feel after all these years."

"Are you surprised?"

"No," she said. "No, I'm not surprised."

Married love was not like anything else, she thought. It was not merely loving each other but loving together—loving the two little rooms that were the first Halliday Advertising Agency, and Mr. Greenstein, and the dogwood tree on the terrace. No matter what violence might be done to your love for each other, these loves remained.

"Mr. Greenstein should see us now," Tony said

She watched him putting on his blue and tan Hawanan print shirt and thought that now he and Jim would not look so much alike any more, because Jim wore nothing but tee thirts around the house in the summer, despite her objection that they looked like underwear

"I'm good Jom's doing well of the office," she said. "It seems I was wrong."

"I don't know." Tony brushed his hair, arranging it catefully so the thicker portions covered the thinner. "I don't know whether you were wrong or not."

"What do you mean >2

"Let's not talk about it now. Let's go downstairs. I could use a martini."

Jim, she thought. Jim and Ann and Mr Greenstein and the dogwood tree. But not Nancy Dellett's son

They were all in the living room after dinner hen Lex arrived. Jim was helping Marcia with her jigsaw, jizz'e and Tony was trying to get WQXR on the radio and Zeld'i was emptying the ash trays that had got filled during cocktails and that Rena always forgot to clear away. It was, she thought afterwards, like a stage set, one of those drawing-toom scenes when the curtain first went up and there was a little small talk to establish the characters and their relationships, but you still did not know what the play was all about—unless, of course, you had read the reviews, in which case you had no a tiprise coming. When Lex walked in, it was like the entrance of the star. The entire focus of the scene centered on him, and the tone of the play was set.

Jim saw him first. "Hey," he said, "it's Lex."

Marcia turned around slowly, "Well, so it is. The return of the native." She looked up into his face and then smiled at Jim, "Make some highballs, yes? It's a long, dusty way from Wash ington."

Les winked at Jim and patted the top of Marcia's head. "Hi, everybody."

"Have you eaten?" Zelda asked him. "Have you had dinner?" And at almost the same time Tony said, "Why didn't you let us know what time you were coming? Somebody could have met the train."

He looked around at them and grinned. The deep, becoming tan he had acquired over the summer had tailed considerably in Washington and there was a smudge of soot on his collar. He seemed to Zelda less indestructible, less unreal than she had ever seen him

"Thanks. Late on the train and got a cab at the station." He sat down and took the drink Jim brought him. "You're not welcoming the conquering hero, you know," he said. "I didn't get the job."

There was nothing to say, Zelda thought. If you were too sympathetic, you implied that something irretrievably tragic had happened. It you shrugged it off, you appeared not to care. Yet somebody had to say something. It was inevitable that it should be Jim who would note over the nuances.

"Why the hell not?" he asked

All of them, including Lex, jaughed. Zelda could not have said what she was laughing at. She wondered whether the others knew.

"I haven't the least idea" Lex said. "They gave me a latte double-talk and leased me pleasantly out." He laughed again. "I wasn't re 'ly sure, until I was in the train coming back, they they had actually said no."

"Well," Tony said. "All right. Let's drink to something. There must be something we can drink to."

Marcia lifted her glass and looked at Lex "Happy days," she said.

'I hey all took a few self-conscious gulps, and then Jim put down his glass and said he guessed he would go out. After a few minutes Lex said he thought he would wash up, and Marcia asked him if he was too tired to take her for a drive, because if he wasn't she would change. He said he would be glad to take her for a drive, that he would shower and dress and be ready in a juffy. That was what he said, "in a juffy.' It was the first time Zelda had ever heard him use a phrase that dated him like that

When they had all gone, Zelda emptied the ash trays again and took the glasses out to the kitchen. Tony had WQXR on when she goe back, and they sat and listened to a Mozart symplions. Only "listened" was not an accurate word for it. Nobody sag knew really listened to music. One couple they visited owned a fine collection of records, and always had a new one to play for their guests, but they themselves talked through it all

"I'd like to lend him some money?" Tony said, "but it's one of those things. I don't want to rub it in. Besides, I don't know what good it would do. What would happen when it was gone? I can t keep giving him handouts."

'He must have something. After all, he worked to ars."

Tony shook his head. 'He hasn't much, not after but last wife of his. Maybe I can make a job for him. I don't know. There ought to be something."

She wondered whether Lex would take a job like that She remembered what he had said to her once about always wanting what Tony had. Now that he had ended with none of it, with nothing, would he accept help from Tony? Most men would not but you could never tell about Lex.

The news came on the radio and they stopped talking to hear it. Some MIG's had been shot down over Korea. The Republicant said the Democrats were corrupt and the Democrats said the Republicans were indifferent to the common man. The Giants were creeping up on the Dodgers for the National League pennant.

Another voice, less crisp, more dulcet, suggested that the drink for after the concert was Culverton whisky, on the rocks or with soda or gingerale. "However you prefer it, you will agree with the Earl of Culverton, the man with the sling—there is no finer whisky."

Tony got up and snapped off the switch. "I don't like that announcer," he said. "He sounds as if he's never taken a drink in his life."

Zelda never waited up for Ann, because she had hated it so when her mother waited up for her. It had almost spoiled her evenings, thinking of her mother sitting there alone in the parlor in her wrapper, watching the clock and listening for her. Whatever reading her mother had done, she had done then, but Zelda did not think it could have been much. The only book Zelda ever remembered seeing in her hand was 'So Pig,' by I data Ferber. She was always sitting with her finger in it when Zelda came in, as if she intended going an with it in a minute, as soon as she had found out why Zelda was so late, but after the whispered duel she invariably went straight upstairs, tiptoeing so as not to wake the others.

Zelda made a point of not being in evidence when Ann came home, but if she was in bed before that, although she sometimes dozed, she never really slept until she heard her key. Since Gerhardt had been coming around, she had to restrain herself to keep from running our and asking Ann, what had happened, where they had gone, what he had said to her. Sometimes, it she was careful not to ask, Ann would drop a word or two the next day. Zelda had to be grateful for these crumbs.

She had just gone to bed the night Lex came back from Washington, when Ann got in, a little after twelve thuty. Selda was disappointed. Twelve thirty was early for a Priday fight, it you were having an exciting time. She lay listening to the sounds in the next room the shoes dropping and the hangers sliding on the closet pole. Ann was trying to be quiet, she was sure, but she still had the heavy-handedness of adolescence. Sometimes she was lovely but sometimes it was hard to understand what a boy like Gerhardt saw in her. There was so much Zelda could have told her about how to hold him, but you could not tell Ann much.

Zelda heard the bed in the next room creak and the lamp snap off. Tony breathed quietly and evenly beside her. Outside a thousand male crickets rubbed their wings together, setting up a clamor that kept city visitors awake, but she did not hear it any more than she had once heard traffic in the N w York streets. Another sound came through to her. She lay without moving for a minute and then she got up. I can't stay here and do nothing, she thought, while my child cries in the night. Even it she doesn't want me, I can't do it

She raised her hand to knock on Ann's door but the gesture seemed artificial and toolish and she just went in and sat down on the bed. Ann was lying on her stomach with her face in the pillow. She stopped for a second, and Zelda saw her shoulders tense, but when she realized that Zelda was not going to say anything or touch her, she went on crying

Zelda waited. It seemed a long time before the sobs began a "Mother?" Ann said, with her face still in the pillow.

"Yes, dear?"

"You're going to be disappointed"

I don't want to hear it. Zelda thought. I don't want to know.
"You couldn't disappoint me," she said. It sounded like a line from a popular song. She had never felt more motherly, less herself. But she went on with it. "Whatever happens, you're my girl." *

Ann folled over. Even in the dark, Zelda could see that her eyes were swellen. She wondered why it was that a child's eyes never got avollen, with all the crying they did. Only a live while ago she had shift (Serbardt than Ant; were a child, and this evening Tony had said so

"Gerry asked me to be anjuged to him." The said, "Fie said he'd wait until I was through, with ballege, if you insteed. He said... She stopped and shook her head, as if she were getting off the track. "I that him you'll be disappointed—I told him I didn't want to see him any more."

Zelda relaxed strengt the incident. "Is there why you think I'll be disappointed. Because you don't want to see him any more?"

"I know you will be's wonderful, and it isn't that I don't like him, but I can't I'm too young to be engaged."

We never felt we were too young for anything, Zelda thought. "I didn't want you to be engaged to him," she said. "Did you think I did? I just wanted you to have a good time."

"I'm too young for him." Ann sat up and hugged her knees with her arms. Zelda was almost afraid to move. She was afraid that if she did or said anything wrong, Ann would stop and never go on again. The trouble was she was not sure what would be wrong. "I may never get married at all," Ann said.

"Well, that's all right. No one will make you." She wanted a cigarette, but she did without it. Ann was always saying she smoked too, much. "I understand you'd like to be a teacher."

"Mol" Ann's knees jerked down and she sat up stiffly. "That was just a crazy idea I had," she said more quietly. "I'm all over that."

...There was something here, but Zelda was not going to ask what it was; she was not going to spoil anything, if she could help it. "You'll find something else you want to do," she said. "There's plenty of time."

Ann pulled up her knices again. "I thought you'd think I was crazy." Zelda did not know whether she meant because of Gerhardt or because she might never want to get married." "Bill didn't call sonight, did he?" she asked suddenly.

"No."

"I guess he won't any more." After a mordent she sighed. "I guess I don't really want him to." She slid slowly down in the bed. "Gosh, I feel better," She lay still, as if considering this, and then added, "It's two bad boys can't cry."

Zelds leaned down and kissed her. "Everything's going to be all right."

Ann did not saswer. She yawned and turned on her side. As Zelda got to the door, she murmured sleepily, "Don't worry. I'll probably get married some day."

Zelda could not go back to bed. She went downstairs and got herself a glass of milk from the refrigerator, something she had not done in thirty years, and sat in the breakfast room sipping it slowly. It was cold and clean-tasting and she had the feeling that she did not have often about anything, that it was exactly right. She thought of Ann and for a moment she wished Ann were have drinking milk with her, but she knew Ann was asleep and then she knew that was exactly right too.

She was still sitting there, slowly sipping the last few drops, when she heard Marcia's car. They came in quietly, and she hoped they would go straight upstairs, but in a moment Marcia tiptoed to the door and looked in.

"I thought it might be you when I saw the light," she said.
"I told Lex to go up." She came in and sat down. Her cheeks were flushed and her eyes had that wonderful alive look that made her seem beautiful. "What the hell are you drinking?"

Zelda laughed. She had not wanted to see anyone. She had wanted to sit-here alone with her glass of milk. But you could not stay in one moment; you always had to go on to something else. She was glad, now, that Marcia was here.

"You look fine," she said. "What are you doing, thriving on Lex's misfortune?"

"Maybe you could put it that way." Marcia lit a cigarette and gave one to Zelda. "Lex and I are going to remarry."

It seemed such an odd word for Marcia to use. Remarry. Zelda did not know why, but it seemed prim and at the same time a attle sulgar. But what difference did it make what word she used?

"If you've made up your mind," Zelda said, "I suppose there's nothing I can say to stop you. I'd like to understand it, though," Without warning she was angry: "How can he marry you now when he hasn't anything, not even a job?"

Marcia smiled. "What else can be do? It's nice clean work. He's tried it before, so he knows the dangers. And the pay is good."

"That isn't funny." There was nothing Zelda could do about her anger now. She got up and began walking back and forth. "It was bad enough before, but at least he wasn't going to have to live off you completely. Now he has nothing to offer you at all.

"He has everything I want." Marcia paused. "No, let's put it this way. He has everything I'm ever likely to get."

Zelda stood still. "Do you know why the State Department won't have him?"

"Oh, sit down, Zel. Yes, of course I know. I told you I talked to Paula Thayer."

"And you don't care?"

"Because there's a rumor around that he has a bastard son?"
Zelda sat down slowly. "Suppose it isn't a rumor?"

"Why," Marcia said, "should I suppose that? The way it stands, I don't have to believe it. There are plenty of things about him I do have to believe. This is one I can skip. The State Department can't give him the benefit of the doubt, but I can."

"But if you knew it were true-if he told you himself-would you marry him then?"

"Yes. I wouldn't let it spoil my life," she said. "I'll never be fool enough to ask him, though. This way, I don't know whether Nancy Dellett has an illegitimate son at all, of whether somebody is just spreading nassy rumors. And if she has, I don't know who the father is and I don't have to care."

Zelda was sure she that heard these words before, and then she knew that they were substantially the words she had told have to the words are believed to the words are th herself, without finding them convincing.

"It seems all wrong," she said. "You're making too many compromises."

"The sanitariums are full of people who won't make compromises. I love Lex and I understand him," she said. "I always have. But it wasn't enough. It's never enough. I wanted him different, but now I'm willing to accept him as he is."

"You mean just sit back and let him take, let him sponge, and smile?"

"That's not what I mean. Look, Zel, if we're going to keep this up, do you mind if I make myself a drink?"

"We don't have to keep it up if you'd rather not."

Marcia laughed. "I love you when you're all stiff and priggish. It reminds me of the way you were when you first came to New York. Even then, it was a pose." She went in to the har and returned with a highball. The ice tray stuck as she took it out, and she swore at it until she got it loose. She put three cubes in her drink and came back to the table, ignoring the water that had splashed all over the floor. "There," she said. "That's better,"

The clock in the hall struck two. It was the same clock that had stood on the first landing in the Framington house, and whenever it chimed after one of the girls had come in late at night, their mother would paus@dramatically in the middle of her lecture until it had stopped. In the Studio, they had sometimes talked like this all night.

"You were telling me about accepting Lex," Zelda soid.

"Ses. Wells This time we'll be all right. Look, Zel. I'm a fat, middle-aged woman. Men like me all right, but who would want to marry me now any more except a drunk like Willie Taynor? Or Lex." She did not sound pitiable. She sounded fine. She took a gulp of her drink and lit another cigarette. "Lex is accepting me, too. He knows everything about me and it doesn't matter. I think that's the only way you can really help anybody, when you don't resent anything they are. Because if you do, they know it, and they resent you right back."

Zeld did not speak. She was thinking of Ann, and of some of the things Ann had said. "I know you think he's wonderful, but I can't--Pm too, young," and "I thought you'd think I was crazy" and "you'll be disappointed."

"Yes," Zelda said. "I see what you mean."

"Do you? Well." Marcia looked at her and then down at her glass. "You know I've grown awfully fond of Jim this aummer," she said. "Fle's a good boy."

What did Jim have to do with this? Zelda thought. "It's obviously mutual," she said;

"He's a good hoy." Marcia repeated. "He'll make out all right with Tony."

"I've never felt that was the place for him."

"I know you haven't. He knows it too. What's the alternative, Zel? He's no Raymond Loewy. He's a boy who's good with his hands, but he can't make a living with them—not the kind of living he'd want, not in the world he has grown up in. He'd never be happy." She smiled at Zelda. "He'll have to compromise too."

"Have you told him this?" ... velonged there.

"No." Marcia said. "It isn't hether he felt wo num. Besides, it isn't from me he needs to had not.

Marcia and Lex rushed their plans so that Ann would not have to miss their wedding. They were married on the terrace, with chrysanthemums blooming in the background, a few hours before she had to leave for freshman week at Radcliffe.

Zelda thought of the first time, in the chapel at City Hall, with a line of other couples waiting outside the door. She and Tony had been there then too. And now they were all here, and Annand Jim were here with them, and for a minute she wondered how they had all got here, how it had all happened. If it had not been for Morgan Riley—But there was no use starting on that. She might as well say, if it had not been for Prohibinon or the girls who acted like a posched egg or the Depression, or Nancy Dellett. . . .

Afterwards, they all watched Marcia and Lex drive off in Marcia's car. They would not say where they were going, only that they would write post-cards.

"They look funny," Ann said. "Almost as if they were young." Two hours later, Ann was gone too, on the train to Boston.

"It deesn't seem fair," Zelda said in the car going home from Grand Central. "Just when children begin to be the most fun, they leave." It was not what she meant to say at all. She did not mean fun. "It's all over too quickly, before you have a chance—" But she did not go on. There was no use trying to put it into words.

"I know," Tony said. Even he couldn't know exactly.

Jim said nothing. She had thought he would kid her. It was the kind of thing he usually kidded her about. But he sar silently in the back seat. Zelda wondered whether he felt all right, because he had not even wanted to drive, and he always wanted to drive. This was the first time he had been home since the night Lex came back from Washington. He had gone to see somebody in New Jerse college, and maybe he had caught something.

"Do you feel well, Jim?" sae asi

"Sure," he said. "I'm fine."

"We'll be seeing you off for confege next," Tony said. "It's going to be a pretty empty house."

Tony always sounded unnatural lately when he talked to Jim, and shift dways had the feeling that Jim might not answer at all. He said nothing now for a long time.

"I guess I might as well tell you," he said finally. "I guess this good a time as any. I'm not going back to college."

Tony cleared his throat. "Why not, Jim?"

"I've been down to see Wick these past few days. I wanted to talk to him." Zelda had to think a minute to remember who Wick was. "He's at Cape May, you know, in the Coast Guard, and I wanted to talk things over with him."

What things I Zelda thought. What things did he have to go all the way drop to Cape May to talk over with a boy she could hardly remember? But his voice was going on from the back sent.

"It's okay there," he said, "They're a bunch of good-guys,"

"All right. They're a bonch of good guys." Tony sounded better, impatient and like himself. "What are you trying to say?"

"I enlisted," Jim haid. "I leave next week."

It was too much. You could not shift that quickly. Two hours ago she had been a witness at her sister's wedding and then she had been the mother sending her youngest child off to college and now she was expected to be the mother sending her son off to war. They were driving along the Hutchinson River Parkway, and nothing had changed, not the toll gates nor the speeding cars nor the shruthery, just beginning to turn, yet nothing was at it had been.

"Oh. Jim, why?" she said. "Why didn't you wait?"

"There wasn't any use," he said. "I guess I can't explain it. I guess you wouldn't understand. But down there at Cape May I felt right. I don't know. As if I belonged there."

The wanted to ask him whether he felt wrong at home, but she did not ask him. She #d not want to hear the answer.

"All right," Tony said. If that's the way you wanted it, all right. There's nothing more say."

"Don't be mad."

"I'm not mad," Tony said. "Neither of us is mad." He took one hand off the wheel and put it over Zelda's an the sembeside him. "A son in the service. That's nothing to be rold about."

"Hearts and flowers," Jim said, and laughed. "Hearts and .Aowers."

They drove along in silence. If only she had had a charte to talk to him, Zelda thought. But then she knew that it probably would have been too late, twenty-five years too late. Even this went back to Morgan Riley and the Studio and stronger orange flower water. Is was a new time now, Jim's sime, and with what they had given him he would have to find his own Tay of living it.

"Will you let me off at Libby's?" he said. "She's having a party.
I'll get a lift home."

When he had gone, Tony said, "Don't worry, Babe. Everything will be all right."

Ir was what she had said to Ann, and it was not so. Everything was never all right. But some things always were, and you made do with those.

"In the end it gets back to you and me, doesn't it?" he said. "After all the others have finished and gone, it gets back to you and me."

She did not know who he meant by all the others, who was included, but she knew this was true. In the end it got back to the two of them.